win'dle-straw", win'dl-strô", n. [Prov. Brit.] 1. The whitethroat. 2. A withered stalk of any one of various grasses, as a species of dog's-tail grass (Cynosurus cristatus), a bent-grass (Agrostis Spica-venti), etc. [< AS. windelstrēow, < windel, woven basket (see WINDLE), + strēow, straw.] win'dle- or win'nle-strae"‡ [Scot.].

wind'ling, wind'ling, n. [Prov. Eng.] That which is torn off by the wind, as a branch of a tree.

wind'mill", wind'mil", n. 1. A machine turned by the wind and designed to furnish motive power, as for operating a flour-mill or for pumping.

In the ordinary modern form largely used in the United States for pumping water for domestic supply, a windmill consists of a tower, trestled or enclosed, within which is a shaft having at the top a rotary shaft set at right angles, and bearing a feathering or steering rudder at one end and a system of adjustable slats, wings, or sails radiating from the other. These radiating vanes or sails are kept facing the wind by the steering-mechanism, and as they revolve they turn a crank, which transmits motion to a pump, millstone, etc. Older forms, in which there is a rotating cap to the tower and four adjustable canvas-covered frames to receive the wind, are common in the Netherlands.

II. i. To drink wine.

wine, n. 1. The fermented juice of the grape; in loose usage, the juice of the grape whether fermented or unfermented.

The credit of the first attempt made to assemble together the Wines of the World for the purpose of comparing and judging them is undoubtedly due to the French King, Philip Augustus [1165-1223], noted for his patronage of learning and his persecution of the Jews.
H. VIZETELLY Wines of World intro., p. 9. [W. L. & CO. '75.]

Wines are dry when they contain little or no sugar, and sweet when the proportion of saccharine matter is clearly perceptible to the taste. Between these two extremes a very great number of wines exist, differing from one another by small proportions of various ingredients. Wines consist essentially of water, alcohol, and flavoring matters, the proportion of alcohol varying from 7.33 per cent. in certain Chablis wines to 25.17 in certain sherries. Bence Jones gives the following average percentages of alcohol in the principal wines: Bordeaux or Claret, 9.1 to 11.1; Burgundy, 10.1 to 13.2; Champagne, 14.1 to 14.8; Madeira, 19.0 to 19.7; Moselle, 8.7 to 9.4; Port, 20.7 to 23.2; Rhine wine, 9.5 to 13.0; Sherry, 15.4 to 24.7. The remaining constituents of wine are volatile oil, œanthic ether, grape-sugar, glycerin, gum, vegetable albumen, extractive and coloring matters, tannic, malic, succinic, phosphoric, carbonic, and acetic acids, potassium bitartrate, and calcium tartrate. According to the wine, certain of the above ingredients may be present or absent. Some of the volatile oils contained in wine have never been isolated; they are supposed to be the cause of the flavor and odor, called the bouquet, and differ with each variety. The quality of the bouquet depends upon the variety of grape, locality of growth, climatic influences, and modes of manufacture. Certain wines that have remained for a long time in bottles deposit tartrates, called crusts, owing to the conversion of saccharine matters into alcohol. In the manufacture of wines the juice expressed from grapes is called must, and is colorless; that from white grapes yields white wine; that from dark-colored grapes, when fermented with the marc, red wine. The must contains from 15 to 33 per cent. of sugar, and at the usual normal temperature of the air, about 60° F., fermentation soon sets in and continues for some time. When nearly all of the sugar has been converted into alcohol and carbon dioxid, the wine is considered formed, when it is racked off into casks. See table below.

2. By extension, the expressed or fermented juice of some other fruit than the grape; as, apple wine; currant wine. 3. The effects of drinking wine; intoxication; as, to be in wine. 4. A wine-party, especially at one of the English universities; as, he gave a wine in his room. 5. Pharm. A medicinal preparation in which wine is used as the menstruum, as wine of opium. 6. A wine-glass: a trade use. [< AS. win, < L. vinum, wine.]

Compounds, etc.:—aromatic wine, a medicinal preparation consisting of small quantities of aromatic plants dissolved in alcohol and red wine. A Wine-skin.

SOME VARIETIES OF WINE.

In the following table the column of "class or type" is intended merely to give an elementary idea of the character of the various illustrations selected. The terminology is unscientific, and is not that used by wine-merchants. Where "U. S." appears after Burgundy, Haut Sauternes, Johannisberger, Port, Sauternes, Barbera, Chablis, Chambertin, Château Margaux, etc., it is intended to mean that more or less crude imitations of the wines of those localities are manufactured in the United States and offered for sale under those names. The United States Government is now (1894) seizing and confiscating such of these imitations as are considered illegal. The wines described under the names of varieties of grape, such as Burger, Cabernet, Carignan, Frontignan, Herbemont, Jurançon, Mondeuse, Muscatel, etc., are simply wines made of those grapes. This is usual all over the world, until a district or vineyard has, by the superiority of its production, gained a name for itself, when its wines are then known by that name, as Château Margaux, Johannisberger, Sauternes, etc. As most wines may be made in widely differing colors, only that color which may be regarded as typical has been here recorded. No attempt has been made to compile a complete list of wines, but only to give those known in commerce. The classic and historic Albanian, Cæcuban, Falernian, Rhætian, and Setinian wines, of which little is known, are omitted as obsolete.

—to wire away, to w. in [Slang, Eng.], to work with a will.

wire, n. 1. A slender rod, strand, or thread of ductile metal, now usually formed by drawing through dies or holes, though formerly made by hammering.

Wire varies in diameter from one inch to $\frac{1}{100}$ of an inch or less, but ordinarily, when thicker than $\frac{2}{16}$ of an inch, it is termed a rod. In making iron and steel wire, a billet of metal is passed through the rolls in a rod-mill until reduced to the desired size of rod. This rod is thoroughly cleaned and scaled, usually by dipping in diluted sulfuric acid, and then threshed, after which it is pointed on one end so that the wire-drawer may be able to grasp it with his tongs as he starts it through the plate or die. It is then run through the dies and reduced one or more sizes in diameter. If further reduction is desired, it requires to be annealed, when the drawing may be repeated through a series of smaller dies. Chilled iron and steel dies are commonly used, but for great accuracy and for fine wires diamond or ruby dies are sometimes used, the drilling of which requires much care and expense. Steel wire low in carbon is spoken of as low grade, though of good quality and better for many uses than a high grade, which is high in carbon; but the latter has greater tensile strength, and may be hardened and tempered.

A Wire-straightener, and Cross-sections of Forms of Wire.
1. A wire-straightener. 2. Pin-wire. 3. Commutator-wire. 4. Pivot-wire. 5. Grooved wire for eye-glasses. 6. Typewriter-bar wire.

Brass wire is made so fine, that when woven into gauze there are 67,000 meshes in a square inch. J. D. STEELE Fourteen Weeks in Nat. Philos. ch. 1, p. 28. [A. S. B. '72.]

Varieties of wire are often specifically named (1) from their use or purpose, or the thing with which connected, or the article into whose manufacture they enter; as, bail-wire (for pails, etc.), baling-w. (soft, annealed, for tying up bales, etc.), bonding-w. (galvanized iron or copper wire for electrically connecting the joints of rails on an electric railway), bonnet-w. (for stiffening bonnets and for stems of artificial flowers), broom-w. (for binding the corn to the stick), bolt-w. (for cutting into small bolts), brush-w. (especially for coarse brushes, as in street-sweepers), bundling- or binder-w. (same as BALING-WIRE), card-w. (fine in size, tempered, elastic, and strong, for the staples of cards and carding-machines), clock-w. (for pillars, arbors, pinions, etc., in clocks), clothes-line w. (of galvanized steel strands, or a coarse wire made up into long links), corset-w. (for stiffening corsets), covering-w. (for winding about music-wire, as in the bass strings of a piano), feeder-w. (see FEEDER, n., 3 (3), for an electric feeder), hat-w. (tempered, used in the rims of men's stiff hats), heddle-w. (for loom-heddles), lock-w. (flat: used in the internal mechanism of locks), magnet-w. (soft copper wire of best quality wrapped with cotton or silk, as for induction-coils, or magnets in telegraph- and telephone-instruments), mattress-w. (fine wire, for wire mattresses), needle-w. (a very high grade of steel wire), piano-w. (same as MUSIC-WIRE: see MUSIC), pin-w. (usually of brass or steel), pinion-w. (see PINION, and illus. above), reed-w. (flat, for the reeds of looms or musical instruments), rivet-w. (for cutting into rivets), rope-w. (for wire ropes, usually of steel, and when for rigging, hawsers, etc., usually galvanized), screw-w. (see SCREW), signal-w. (for operating railway-signals), spectacle-w. (usually grooved, to hold the glass firmly), spline-w. (rectangular, for making splines or feathers), trolley-w. (an electric wire without insulation, so that the current may be transmitted at any point to a trolley), umbrella-w. (tempered wire for the ribs or soft wire for the cross-pieces of umbrellas), vineyard-w. (for tying up grapevines, etc.); (2) from the material of which they are made; as, aluminum w. (made like steel wire, and one-third as strong for the same size), brass w. (useful for springs, etc., where iron would rust), copper w. (valuable as a conductor, and increasing in use, though costly), iron w. (preferred to steel for some uses), platinum w. (used principally for incandescent lamps, and chemical and scientific apparatus, where it is exposed to great heat), steel w. (made in all grades and tempered for springs, drills, etc.); (3) from the business, place, etc., in which used; as, bookbinders' w. (for wire-stitching), cooperage w. (usually of coppered steel, used with wooden hoops to strengthen a barrel), market-w. (suitable for the retail hardware-trade, usually soft steel wire in the common sizes), office-w. (insulated copper conducting wire for use in wiring telegraph- and telephone-offices, and also used in hotels and large buildings), telegraph- or telephone-w. (frequently an iron wire, because it is a better conductor than steel, though a low grade of steel is often used on account of its strength, especially for short telephone-lines in cities: often bimetallic wire, and sometimes, as for long-distance telephone-lines, a pure copper wire).

2. The electric telegraph as a means of communication; as, the news came by wire. 3. The string of a musical instrument; hence, often, a stringed instrument.

The long-robed minstrels wake the warbling wire.
BEATTIE The Minstrel bk. i, st. 34.

4. A very fine metallic thread, or sometimes a cobweb, or more commonly one of a set of lines ruled on glass, in the focus of a telescope. Compare RETICLE. 5. Ornith. A long slender filament of the plumage of various birds. 6. [Polit. Slang.] A secret means of exerting influence; as, to manipulate the wires. Compare WIRE-PULLER. 7. [Thieves' Slang, Eng.] A long-fingered pickpocket. 8†. A metallic whip. 9†. A thread. [< AS. wīr, wire.]

Compounds, etc.:—B, BB, ExBB wire, etc., best, extra best wire, etc.: commercial abbreviations for grades of telegraph-wire.—bimetallic wire, a wire having a steel core surrounded by copper, usually in equal proportions, for use in telegraph- and telephone-lines, the steel giving strength and the copper conductivity.—bone w., a stiffening wire in place of whalebone, as in dress-waists, etc.—guard-wires", n. pl. A pair of galvanized wires suspended above a wire carrying high voltage to protect anything, as falling wires, from the current, or placed under it to prevent damage in case of its breakage.—machinery-w., n. A good quality of wire, harder than annealed, but not tempered, and adapted to bending.—patented w., wire tempered by the process originally patented by James Horsfall of England.—stone w., originally, wire put up in coils weighing one stone; now, generally, a fine size of annealed wire suitable for weaving netting, wirecloth, etc.—stranded w. [Eng.], wire rope.—telodynamic w., a wire adapted to transmit electric energy through a great distance, being well insulated and having a high conductivity.—wire-bent", n. A European mat-grass (Nardus stricta).—w.-bird, n. A ring-plover (Aegialites sanctae-helenae) of St. Helena.—w. bridge, a suspension bridge: an old name.—w. brush, any brush made largely of wire. Specifically: (1) A gilders' brush of brass wire, used to spread gilding or to clean gold- and silver-work. (2) A hair-brush in which metal wires take the place of bristles. (3) A brush having stiff iron wires, used for street-sweepers, etc.—w. cartridge, a cartridge for a shotgun in which the shot are covered with a light wire case, to restrain scattering.—w. cloth, a fabric of woven wire, as for strainers, window-screens, etc.—w.-cutter, n. A tool for cutting wire; especially, a pair of cutting-nippers of suitable form.—w.-dancer, n. One who performs feats of balancing, etc., upon a wire stretched in mid-air. Compare ROPE-DANCER; ROPE-WALKER.—w.-dancing, n.—w.-edge, n. A bur or rough edge, formed by grinding a tool too much on one side or in the wrong direction.—w.-edged, a. Having a rough or wiry edge.—w.-finder, n. A magnetic telephone to detect which wire in a bunch is conducting a signal.—w.-former, n. A machine for cutting and shaping wire into loops, bends, staples, eyelets, or other shapes. w.-forming machine‡.—w.-gage, n. 1. A gage for measuring the diameter of round wire, usually a round plate with slots on its periphery numbered according to an arbitrary standard, or a long graduated plate with a slot of diminishing width. 2. A standard system of sizes for wire. The Birmingham or Stubs wire-gage (B. W. G.) is numbered 1 for .300 of an inch and 36 for .004 of an inch; the American (Brown & Sharpe's), 1 for .3893 and 36 for .005; New British standard, 1 for .300 and 36 for .0076.—w.-glass, n. Wire netting embedded in sheet glass, used in roof-coverings for factories, etc., so that if the glass is broken no fragments will fall.—w.-grass, n. 1. The English blue-grass (Poa compressa), found chiefly in sterile soil. 2. The dog's-tail grass (Eleusine Indica), a valuable annual for pasturage in the southern United States.—wire'grub", n. Same as WIREWORM.—w.-heel, n. A disease of a horse's foot.—w. lathing, coarse woven wire for use in place of wooden laths to hold plastering.—w.-micrometer, n. A micrometer in which fine wires are made to move over the field by the turning of delicate screws having graduated heads for noting the fractional parts of their rotation.—w.-milling machine, a machine for milling or shaping the ends or pieces of wire that have been cut short for any special purpose, as for clockwork, locks, etc.—w. netting, a coarse wire fabric, used for making screens, etc.—w.-pan, n. A baking-pan with a bottom of wire cloth.—w.-pegger, n. A machine or device for cutting and driving small nails, as substitutes for pegs, into shoe-soles. nail'ing-machine"‡.—w.-pointer, n. A machine-pointing for wire to start it through the dies for drawing.—w.-road, n. A ropeway or wireway.—w. rod. 1. A billet of iron or steel after it has been passed through the rolling-mill and been reduced in size preparatory to drawing. 2. Any metal rod of small diameter.—w.-shafted, a. Having a shaft without a web or vane.—w.-stitched, a. Stitched or bound with wire; as, a wire-stitched magazine. w.-sewed†.—w.-stitcher, n. A bookbinders' machine for stitching with wire. See illus. under STITCHER.—w.-straightener, n. A machine having several dies or rolls set in line, so that when bent wire is drawn through it comes out straight. See illus. under WIRE.—w.-stretcher, n. A device used by linemen, etc., to stretch wire between posts or to draw together the ends of wires, so that a joint may be formed.—w.-tailed, a. Having wire-shafted tail-feathers; thread-tailed; as, the wire-tailed swallow (Uromitus filiferus) of India.—w. tape, a thin strip of flat steel wire, arranged with a reel, and bearing graduations, for use as a measuring-tape.—w.-tramway, n. A ropeway or wireway.—w.-twist, n. A combination of iron and steel wires, or wires of two grades of iron, so welded and twisted together as to insure great tensile strength: used in making barrels for firearms.—w.-worked, a. [Rare.] Fine-drawn; intricate.—w.-worker, n. 1. One who manufactures wire into articles, cloth, etc. 2. A wire-puller.—w.-working, n. 1. The act, process, or business of manufacturing articles from wire. 2. Wire-pulling.—w.-works, n. sing. & pl. A factory where wire or articles of wire are made.

wire'an"gle, n. Same as WARRIANGLE.

wire'draw", wair'drô', v. [WIRE'DREW'; WIRE'DRAWN'; WIRE'DRAW'ING.] I. t. 1. To draw, as a metal rod, through a series of holes of diminishing diameter to reduce it to wire. 2. To reduce the pressure of (steam or other motive fluid) by friction in passing through small or narrow ports and channels. 3. To draw out by fine distinctions; subtleize; strain unduly.

His [Socrates's] writings seem to be made up of a number of very wiredrawn notions about virtue.
CARLYLE Hist. Literature lect. ii, p. 36. [S. '92.]

4. To spin out to great length, as a speech.

A member may have a thought or a fact, . . . but . . . unless he can wire-draw it into a two-hours speech, . . . he will sit stock-still. MATHEWS Words ch. 6, p. 155. [S. C. G. '77.]

5. [Archaic.] To defraud; outwit; also, to pervert.

II. i. To act as a wiredrawer.

—wire'draw-er, n. 1. A person engaged in the business or act of wiredrawing. 2. A mechanism for drawing out wire. See WIREDRAW, 1. 3. One who is overrefined or prolix in statement; also, one who distorts truth. 4†. A stingy, grasping person.—wire'drawing, n.

wire'man, wair'man, n. [WIRE'MEN, pl.] A man who has to do with wire; especially, one who handles wire for telegraph-lines, etc.; a wirer.

wire'-pull"er, wair'-pul'er, n. One who pulls the wires, as of a puppet or marionette; hence, one who uses secret means to control others or to accomplish his own schemes; an intriguer; a wire-worker.

The old political wire-pullers never go near the man they want to gain, if they can help it; they find out who his intimates and managers are, and work through them.
HOLMES Elsie Venner ch. 14, p. 249. [H. M. & CO. '86.]

wir'er, wair'er, n. 1. A trapper who snares with wire contrivances. 2. A wireman.

wire'smith", wair'smith', n. A smith who made wire by the old method of drawing it out by hammering.

wire'way", wair'wê', n. 1. Same as ROPEWAY. 2. A cash-carrier railway, or parcel-railway.

wire'work", wair'wûrk', n. Small articles made of wire or wire cloth; wire fabrics in general.

wire'worm", wair'wûrm', n. 1. The hard-bodied worm-like larva of a click-beetle or elaterid, often destructive to plants by devouring the roots. 2. [U. S.] An iulid myriapod; galley-worm. 3. A strongyle (Strongylus contortus) infesting sheep.

wir'ing, wair'ing, ppr. & verbal n. of WIRE, v.

—wir'ing-ma-chine", n. 1. A machine or device used by tinmen for bending the edges of tin pans, etc., over a wire, as for forming a brim. 2. An apparatus assisting in the operation of wiring a bottle; a cork-wiring machine. 3. A tool for fixing staples in the slats of a Venetian blind.—w.-press, n. A machine for wiring pieced tinware.

wi'ri-wa, wi'ri-wo, n. [Afr.] A West-African mouse-bird (Colius senegalensis).

wir'ry†, vt. To worry.

wir'y, wair'i, a. 1. Having great resisting power; thin, but tough and sinewy: said of persons.

A wild and wiry man was he, This tawny chief of Shoshonee.
JOAQUIN MILLER The Ship in the Desert pt. i, st. 5.

2. Like wire; stiff; as, wiry hair. 3. Feeble and thin; thready: said of the pulse. 4. Made of wire.

—wir'i-ly, adv. In a wiry manner; as if of wire.—wir'i-ness, n. The state or quality of being wiry.

wis†, adv. Certainly; surely.

wis, wis, vt. [Archaic.] To suppose; think. See IWIS.

And he said with a smile, 'Our ship, I wis, Shall be of another form than this!'
LONGFELLOW Building of the Ship st. 3.

wis'ardt, n. Wizard.

wis'dom, wiz'dum, n. 1. The state or quality of being wise. (1) The power of discerning what is true and right; the power of discerning what is conducive to the highest interests; discernment of the real characteristics and relations of conduct. (2) Conformity, so far as one's own conduct is concerned, to the course of action dictated by such discernment. (3) Such discernment combined with such conformity of conduct. (4) In a lower sense, good practical judgment; ordinary sagacity; common sense.

Wisdom is knowledge made our own and properly applied.
GOUGH Sunlight and Shadow ch. 15, p. 203. [A. D. W. '81.]

2. A high degree of knowledge, such as is gained by research or close study; erudition; learning.

The worst use we can make of our wisdom is to display it in disparagement of the elder ages who were also wise according to their own lights. D. H. WHEELER By-Ways of Literature ch. 7, p. 120. [F. & W. '83.]

3. In Scripture: (1) Ready insight into the divine law, with obedience to such law: so used especially in Proverbs, where it is sometimes personified, and is by many thought to denote Christ. (2) Sometimes, in the Pauline epistles, worldly opinions, especially Greek speculation or rhetoric; as, the wisdom of this world: an opprobrious sense. (3) The Christian spirit or heavenly character; as, the wisdom that is from above is first pure, then peaceable, etc. (4) The higher Christian knowledge, or "strong meat," such as that set forth by the apostle Paul; as, howbeit we speak wisdom among them that are perfect. (5) [W-] The Book of Wisdom of Solomon. See below. 4. A wise saying or maxim; also, a wise course of action.

If she had ever said anything about herself, which she never did,—one of her many wisdoms.
HELEN HUNT JACKSON Ramona ch. 1, p. 2. [R. BROS. '85.]

5. A collection of wise sayings, or a recital of wise conduct. 6. A wise person; the personification of that which is wise; as, if your wisdom consents. [< AS. wisdōm, < wīs, wise; and see -DOM.]

Synonyms: attainment, depth, discernment, discretion, enlightenment, erudition, foresight, information, insight, judgment, judiciousness, knowledge, learning, prescience, profundity, prudence, reason, reasonableness, sagacity, sense, skill, understanding. Enlightenment, erudition, information, knowledge, learning, and skill are acquired, as by study or practise. Insight, judgment, profundity or depth, reason, sagacity, sense, and understanding are native qualities of mind, though capable of increase by cultivation. The other qualities are on the border-line. Wisdom has been defined as "the right use of knowledge," or "the use of the most important means for attaining the best ends," wisdom thus presupposing knowledge for its very existence and exercise. Wisdom is mental power acting upon the materials that fullest knowledge gives in the most effective way. There may be what is termed "practical wisdom" that looks only to material results; but in its full sense wisdom implies the highest and noblest exercise of all the faculties of the moral nature as well as of the intellect. Prudence is a lower and more negative form of the same virtue, respecting outward and practical matters, and largely with a view of avoiding loss and injury; wisdom transcends prudence, so that while the part of prudence is ordinarily also that of wisdom, cases arise, as in the exigencies of business or of war, when the highest wisdom is in the disregard of the maxims of prudence. Judgment, the power of forming decisions, especially correct decisions, is broader and more positive than prudence, leading one to do, as readily as to refrain from doing; but judgment is more limited in range and less exalted in character than wisdom; to say of one that he displayed good judgment is much less than to say that he manifested wisdom. Skill is far inferior to wisdom, consisting largely in the practical application of acquired knowledge, power, and habitual processes, or in the ingenious contrivance that makes such application possible. In the making of something perfectly useless there may be great skill, but no wisdom. Compare ACUMEN; ASTUTE; KNOWLEDGE; PRUDENCE; SAGACIOUS.—Antonyms: absurdity, error, fatuity, folly, foolishness, idiocy, imbecility, imprudence, indiscretion, miscalculation, misjudgment, nonsense, senselessness, shallowness, silliness, stupidity. Compare synonyms for ABSURD; IDIOCY.

—Book of Wisdom of Jesus, same as ECCLESIASTICUS.—Book of W. of Solomon, a book of the Apocrypha, consisting of a hymn in praise of wisdom: ascribed by tradition to Solomon, but regarded, especially by Protestants, as dating from the first or second century B. C. Called also simply Wisdom.—w. religion (Theosophy), the one religion that is assumed to be the fountainhead of all now existing creeds: the basis of theosophy.—wis'dom-tooth", n. The last or third molar of the human jaw, which appears about the twentieth year. See illus. under DENTITION.—Word of W. (Mormon Ch.), a revelation given through Joseph Smith, instructing in the use of proper food, abstinence from stimulants and narcotics, and counseling in other hygienic practises.

wise, wais, vt. [Scot.] 1. To incline; turn. 2. To lead; send; direct. weiset.

wise, waiz, a. [WI'SER; WI'SEST.] 1. Having a clear and correct discernment of what is conducive to the highest interests, and, in one's own conduct, conforming to the course of action prescribed by such discernment; choosing the best end and the best means for reaching such end; as, a wise father; a wise ruler; in a lower sense, sagacious; discreet; judicious; also, shrewd; crafty. 2. Marked by wisdom; embodying wisdom; characterized by sagacity; prudent; sensible; as, wise counsel or conduct; a wise remark.

The nursery rhyme and the 'wise saw' embody the serious belief of past times. EDWARD CLODD Myths and Dreams pt. ii, § 12, p. 232. [C. & W. '85.]

3. Possessed of great learning; erudite; learned.

A man whom science had made wise
JONES VERY The Man of Science st. 1.

4. Suited to a man of wisdom; sage; grave. 5. Having practical knowledge of the arts or sciences. 6. Versed in mysterious things, especially in some occult science or art. 7. [Scot.] Being in one's senses; sane. [< AS. wīs, wise, < root of witan, know.]

Synonyms: deep, discerning, enlightened, erudite, intellectual, intelligent, judicious, knowing, profound, rational, reasonable, sagacious, sage, sapient, sensible, solid, sound, thoughtful. See EXPEDIENT; POLITIC; PRUDENT.—Antonyms: see synonyms for ABSURD; IGNORANT.

—never the wiser, without information or intelligence; still in utter ignorance.—the wise men. 1. The Magi who followed the star of Bethlehem and brought offerings of gold, frankincense, and myrrh to the infant Savior (Matt. ii, 1, 2). Called also the three kings, from the tradition that they were Oriental monarchs, and said to have been named Gaspar, Melchior, and Balthazar. They are frequent subjects of art. See MAGI. 2. The so-called seven wise men of Greece, who during the period 620–550 B. C. were distinguished for practical wisdom, namely, Thales of Miletus, Periander of Corinth, Pittacus of Mitylene, Cleobulus of Rhodes, Bias of Priene, Chilon of Sparta, and Solon of Athens.—to make it w.†, to make it a matter of deliberation.—wise'-hand"ed, a. Having or due to well-trained hands.—w.-hearted, a. [Archaic.] Having wisdom or skill.—w.-lookin', a. [Scot.] Respectable in dress or appearance; as, a wise-lookin' body.—w. woman. 1. A fortune-teller; witch. 2. A midwife.

wise, n. Way of doing anything; manner; fashion: in phrases. [< AS. wīse, way, from root of witan, know.]

If grief came in such unimagined wise, How may joy dawn!
EMMA LAZARUS Epochs pt. xi, st. 2.

—in any wise, in any manner or way.—in no w., by no means; not at all.—on this w. [Archaic], after this fashion; in this way.—to make w.†, to pretend; feign.

-wise, suffix. The substantive wise used as a termination, originally with or without a preposition preceding it; as, no*wise*, any*wise*, like*wise*, other*wise;* often confused with -way, -ways. See WISE; GUISE; -WAY; -WAYS.

wise'a"cre, waiz'ê'ker, n. 1. One who affects great wisdom; hence, opprobriously, a simpleton; dunce.

Peter, thou art such a wiseacre! thou do'st not know the difference between a conjuror and a juggler.
ADDISON The Drummer act ii, sc. 2.

2†. A wise man; sage. [< G. weissager, < OHG. wizago, soothsayer, < wizan, see.]

—wise'a"cre-dom, n. Wiseacres collectively.

wise'-like", waiz'-laik', a. [Scot.] Resembling that which is wise; sensible.

wise'ly, waiz'li, adv. 1. In a wise manner; prudently; judiciously; knowingly. 2. [Archaic.] Craftily.

wise'moot†, n. Same as WITENAGEMOT.

wise'ness†, n. Wisdom.

wis'er-ite, wis'gr-ait, n. Mineral. A yellowish-white to gray, pearly, silky, fibrous, hydrous manganese carbonate. [< D. F. Wiser, Swiss mineralogist.]

wish, wish, v. I. t. 1. To have a wish for; desire; crave; want: generally with an objective clause; as, to wish quiet; I wish that he would go; your father wishes to see you.

He lived as mothers wish their sons to live,
He died as fathers wish their sons to die.
HALLECK Death of W. H. Allen l. 11.

2. To frame or express a wish in favor of; invoke upon some one; bid: with an indirect object; as, he wished me good-night. 3†. To commend to the care, kindness, or approval of another.

II. i. To have a wish; cherish a wish, either for what is or for what is not supposed to be obtainable; feel a longing.

'Tis pity a man should be so weak and languishing, that he can't even wish. MONTAIGNE Works tr. by Hazlitt Of Experience in vol. iii, bk. iii, ch. 13, p. 429. [H. & H. '66.]

[< AS. wȳscan, < wūsc, wish.]

Synonyms: want. To want always implies to be without or to be in need of, and may be said of things that can have no wish, as when we say the wall wants two feet of the required height. When want is used as the correlative of wish, there is always implied, in correct use, the sense of need as well as of desire; the epicure may wish for some tempting viand after a full meal; the hungry man wants food. See DESIRE.

—to wish one further [Slang], to wish one in another place, or out of the reach of something.—wish'ing-cap", n. A fabled cap which, while worn, confers on the wearer the power of having his wishes realized. Wishing-ring and wishing-rod are occasionally used with similar meaning.

—wish'a-bl(e, a. That may be wished for; desirable.—wish'ed-ly†, adv. According to one's desire or wish.—wish'er, n. One who wishes: often used in composition; as, well-wisher.

wish, n. 1. A craving or desire, usually for some definite thing, and often approaching will as involving something of choice; sometimes, strong and persistent desire or longing.

And every wish for better things
An undreamed beauty nearer brings.
WHITTIER The Seeking of the Waterfall st. 26.

2. An expression of such a desire; petition; request; hence, an invocation of blessing or an imprecation. 3. Something wished for; the accomplishment of a desire or a thing desired; as, to have one's wish; his safety is my dearest wish.

It is surely a happy thing for God's creatures that he does not grant every one of their wishes. MCCOSH Realistic Philosophy vol. i, pt. ii, div. iv, p. 236. [S. '90.]

[< AS. wūsc, wish.]

Synonyms: see DESIRE; WILL.

—wish'-bone", n. The forked bone formed by the united clavicles of a bird. When pulled apart by two persons the possession of the longer part is supposed to insure the fulfilment of a wish previously made. See illus. under STERNUM. mer'ry-thought"‡; wish'ing-bone"‡.—w.-maiden, n. See VALKYR.

wish'ful, wish'ful, a. 1. Having a wish or desire; full of longing; desirous; eager: often followed by of or an infinitive; as, to be wishful of aid.

Men . . . are always wishful to pry into futurity.
JAY Morning Exercises Nov. 6.

2. Showing an eager longing; yearning; wistful; as, a wishful gaze. 3. [Poet.] Exciting wishes; alluring.

—wish'ful-ly, adv.—wish'ful-ness, n.

wish'nest, n. Sentimental sadness; melancholy yearning.

Wish-os'kan, wish-os'kon, n. A North-American linguistic stock. See AMERICAN.

wisht, pp. Wished. PHIL. SOC.

wish'ton-wish", wish'tun-wish', n. [Am. Ind.] 1. The prairie-dog. 2. Incorrectly, the whippoorwill: so used by James Fenimore Cooper. west'ton-wish"†.

wish'y-wash", wish'y-wesh', n. [Colloq.] Any thin, weak, insipid drink; slops. [Reduplication of WASH.] wish'y-wash"y‡.

wish'y-wash"y, wish'i-wesh'i, a. [Colloq.] Thin, weak, pale, and diluted, as liquor; hence, lacking in solidity, consistence, or vigor; feeble; forceless; unsubstantial; as, a wishy-washy address; wishy-washy sentiment. [Reduplication of WASHY.]

Do not destroy all the fibre of your mind and lower your whole mental tone by reading wishy-washy stuff.
ANNA C. BRACKETT Technique of Rest ch. 3, p. 110. [H. '92.]

wis'ket, wis'ket, n. [Prov.] A basket. whis'ket‡.

wis'lyt, adv. Certainly; surely.

wis'omest, n. pl. Tops of carrots, turnips, etc.

wisp, wisp, vt. 1. To dress, brush, or groom with a wisp or whisk. 2. To fold and lightly twist into a wisp or wisp-like form; rumple; crumple.

wisp, n. 1. A small bunch, as of hay, straw, or twigs, used for rubbing or wiping something; mere handful; also, an irregular bit; a scrap.

A wisp of straw were worth a thousand crowns, wit²†, vi. To act the part of a wit; joke.

wit, n. 1. The ready perception and happy expression of unexpected or amusing analogies or other relations between ideas apparently incongruous or unrelated; sudden and ingenious association of ideas or words causing delight and surprise. Compare humor.

Humor draws its materials from situations and characteristics, Wit seizes on unexpected and complex relations. Humor is chiefly representative and descriptive. . . . Wit is brief and sudden, and sharply defined as a crystal, it does not make pictures, it is not fantastic. George Eliot Essays, German Wit p. 100. (F. & W. '83.)

2. Hence, one who has the faculty of writing or saying witty things. 3. The power of knowing or comprehending; wisdom; intelligence; judgment; also, the power of invention; ingenuity.

I know of no more striking proof of the wit of man than the gradual unravelling of the strange hieroglyphic signs in which the learning of the ancient Egyptians was enshrined.

woo'ing-ly, wū'ing-li, adv. In a wooing or inviting manner; persuasively.

wool, wul, vt. [Slang, U. S.] To pull or rumple the hair of.

wool, n. 1. The soft and more or less long, curly, or crisped hair obtained from sheep and some allied animals, and used chiefly in the manufacture of clothing.

Next to cotton, wool is the most important textile material. As a raw product it varies greatly in length of fiber and fineness of texture, according to the animal from which it is taken. It is prepared for use by sorting, cleaning, oiling and picking, combing or carding, etc., and is then made either into felt, woolen yarn and cloth, or worsted yarn and cloth. Its felting property is due to the peculiar irregular or scaly character of the fibers. Pure wool of one quality is not generally used for weaving, but usually mixed with cotton, shoddy, mungo, or the like. Among commercial wools of importance are those obtained from the alpaca (see ALPACA), the llama, the Angora goat, the camel, and from the Cashmere goat of the Himalayas. As shorn from the sheep, wool is divided commercially into short or carding w. (3 to 4 inches long) and long or combing w. (4 to 6 inches long). The short staple yields the finer wool. Short-staple domestic wool is divided into eight grades, namely: Picklock, which is the finest, prime, choice, super, head, seconds, abb, and breech or livery. Worsted w. is classed downward from fine, blue, neat, brown, breach, downright, seconds, to abb.

Structure of Wool.

word, n. 1. A vocal sound or combination of vocal sounds, used as a symbol to embody and signify an idea or thought, especially a notion or conception, and forming one of the elements of language; a single independent utterance, forming usually a constituent unit of a sentence; vocable. See LANGUAGE.

A vocal sound that is a mere reflex of sensation is not usually regarded as a word; but a vocal sound of reflex origin may become by general use significant of an idea, and therefore as truly a word as any utterance belonging to language; such a word is oh. A word may be a single elementary sound symbolized by one letter, as the English indefinite article, or a combination of many sounds; it may express a simple or a complex idea; it may be any part of speech; it may be an elementary word, as eat, or a complicated derivative, as uneatableness. In human language all words, except proper names and certain exclamations, are signs of generalized ideas, called notions. Even particles that now seem almost unmeaning and unnecessary originally expressed some verbal, substantive, or other idea.

Signs and gestures preceded words. The first terms were monosyllables. ROBERT FLINT Vico ch. 9, p. 212. [W. B. '84.]

2. The letter or combination of written or printed letters or characters that stands for a significant vocal sound or sounds; as, an italicized word. 3. A vocable considered only as a sound, or a collocation of letters, apart from meaning, or as used unmeaningly; as, we want ideas, not words.

But what are these moral sermons [of Seneca]? Words, nothing but words. UHLHORN Conflict of Christianity with Heathenism tr. by Smyth and Ropes, bk. i, ch. 2, p. 93. [S. '79.]

R. BRADLEY Story of the Goths ch. 19, p. 183. [G. P. P. '88.]

4. A manufacturing or other industrial establishment; usually in the plural form, which is often used as a collective singular; as, an iron-works. 5. pl. Running-gear or machinery, as of a watch. 6. Manner of working or style of treatment; management; as, what work he makes of painting! 7. pl. Theol. Moral duties considered as external acts, especially as meritorious; such duties, together with religious observances, regarded as a ground of acceptance with God: opposed to salvation through grace and faith; as, not of works lest any man should boast. 8. Physics. The accomplishment of motion, or of a change supposed to involve motion, against the action of a force tending to resist it, as when a weight is raised against the force of gravity, or a body dragged against the resistance of friction. The doing of work always involves an expenditure or disappearance of energy, actual or potential, of which the work done is the measure. Work is necessarily done whenever a force acts upon a moving point in the direction of its motion, and may then be measured by the product of the force into the distance through which the point moves while it acts. Thus, the work done by lifting a weight of ten pounds five feet is 50 foot-pounds. Compare ENERGY.

When a force produces acceleration, or when it maintains motion unchanged in opposition to resistance, it is said to do work.
GANOT Physics tr. by Atkinson, ¶ 59, p. 44. [W. W. & CO. '90.]

9. Mining. Ore before it is dressed. 10. [Rare.] Difficulty; trouble. 11†. Action; activity. [< AS. weorc, work.]

Synonyms: achievement, action, business, deed, doing, drudgery, employment, exertion, labor, occupation, performance, product, production, toil. Work is the generic term for any continuous application of energy toward an end; work may be hard or easy. Labor is hard and wearying work; toil is straining and exhausting work. Work is also used for any result of working, physical or mental, and has special senses, as in mechanics, which labor and toil do not share. Drudgery is plodding, irksome, and often menial work. See ACT; BUSINESS; PRODUCTION; TOIL.—Antonyms: ease, idleness, leisure, recreation, relaxation, repose, rest, vacation.

X

Roman. Black Letter. Script.

X[1], x, ecs, n. [EXES, X's, or Xs, ecs'-ėz, pl.] 1. A letter: the twenty-fourth in the English alphabet; in Bell's "Visible Speech," ↀ ᙀ or ↀ ᙀ; the sign of the consonant diphthong cs, as in ex'tra, or gz, as in exact, and initial a sign of z, Visible Speech ᙀ, as in xanthous, Xenophon.

In Latin x springs from c + s, g + s, h + s, ch + s, t + s, p + s, n + s. In Anglo-Saxon it appears sometimes as metathesis of sc, as āxian > āscian, ask. The same mouth-movements make cs or gz, as the vocal cords are open or close. Vowel assimilation produces gz between two vowels, unless ex is strengthened by an accent: exact = egzact, but ex'odus = ecs'odus. This rule does not govern the pronunciation of all words or of all persons. In folk-Latin x is often weakened to s, as, in English initial to z, Xenophon = Zenophon; sometimes in old English it is written for sh: xal = shall.

The character X is from Latin X = cs < Early Western Greek X + = ks [? cent. B. C.], an addition of the Greeks to the Phenician alphabet. This same character (X) is used in Eastern Greek and in classic Greek for ch = kh, and Ξ, ξ is used for ks. In Latin, therefore, x appears in words spelled in Greek with ξ, Ξ. Xanthus represents Greek Ξανθος, Xenophon Greek Ξενοφων. There is no rune for the digraph ks, but x appears as the rune for g. In the Anglo-Saxon alphabet x is used with its Latin power, ks, sometimes hs. The name ex is Latin.

Dr. Taylor attempts to connect Greek Ξ with Semitic samech ס, chair-back S. TAYLOR The Alphabet vol. i, ch. 2, p. 99. According to his view, the history of the characters is represented as follows:

Hiero-glyphic Chair-back. | Egyptian Hieratic. | Phenician. | Early Greek. | Roman. | English Script.

2. An abbreviation: (1) Christ: properly the Greek letter Chi, which is the same in form as English X. Compare CHRISSOM. Herp.* A subfamily of colubroid snakes, especially those with upper scales granular and no frontal or parietal plates. Xen''o-der-mi'na‡. Xen''o-der'mus or Xen''o-der'ma, n. (t. g.) — xen''o-der'min(e, a. & n. — xen-od'o-chy, n. 1. The entertainment of strangers; hospitality. 2. Same as XENODOCHIUM. — xen-og'a-my, n. Bot. Cross-fertilization; the fecundation of the ovules of a flower by pollen from another flower of the same species on a different plant. Compare ALLOGAMY; GEITONOGAMY. — xen-og'a-mous, a. — xen''o-gen'e-sis, n. Biol. 1. Heterogenesis. 2. The fancied production of an organism of one kind by an organism of another. xen-og'e-ny‡. — xen''o-ge-net'ic, a. Of, pertaining to, or of the nature of xenogenesis. xen''o-gen'ic‡. — xen''o-ma'ni-a, n. [Rare.] A mania for or inordinate attachment to anything that is foreign.

> No writer of the period has such a command of pure English, unadulterated by xenomania and unweakened by purism, as Daniel.
> SAINTSBURY Hist. Elizabethan Lit. ch. 4, p. 136. [MACM. '87.]

— xen''o-me'ni-a, n. Vicarious or supplementary menstruation, in which the menstrual flow is from some other part than the uterus. — xen''o-mor'phic, a. Petrol. Not having its own individual form, but having an irregular shape given it by surrounding minerals: said of the constituents of a crystalline rock. al-lo''tri-o-mor'phic‡. — Xen''o-pel'ti-dæ, n. pl. Herp. A family of colubroid snakes with coronoid bones and no postorbitals or supraorbitals. Xen''o-pel'tis, n. (t. g.) — xen''o-pel'tid, n. — xen''o-pel'toid, a. — Xen''o-pel-ti'næ, n. pl. Herp. The Xenopeltidæ as a subfamily of Colubridæ. — xen''o-pel'tine, a. & n. — Xen''o-phor'i-dæ, n. pl. Conch. A family of tænioglossate gastropods, including the carrier-shells, with strombiform foot and teeth, and a sharply carinated trochiform shell, to which foreign substances are generally agglutinated. Xen-oph'o-rus, n. (t. g.) — xen''o-phor'id, n. — xen-oph'o-roid, a. — xen''oph-thal'mi-a, n. Inflammation of the lining membrane of the eye, due to the presence of some foreign substance; traumatic conjunctivitis. — Xen''o-pod'i-dæ, n. pl. Herp. An African family of aglossal amphibians with teeth in the upper jaw. Xen'o-pus, n. (t. g.) — xen''o-pod'id, n. — xen''o-po'doid, a. & n. — Xen''op-ter-yg'i-i, n. pl. Ich. A suborder of teleocephalous fishes with a pectoral suctorial apparatus between and involving the ventral fins, as Gobiesocidæ. — xen''op-ter-yg'i-an, a. & n. — Xen''o-rhin'i-dæ, n. pl. Herp. A Papuan family of anurous amphibians. Xen''o-rhi'na, n. (t. g.) — xen''o-rhin'id, n. — xen''o-rhi'noid, a. — Xen''o-sau'ri-æ, n. pl. Herp. An American family of diploglossate lizards with cranial arches developed and temporal fossæ not roofed. Xen''o-sau'rus, n. (t. g.) — xen''o-sau'rid, n. — xen''o-sau'roid, a. & n. — xen'o-time, n. Mineral. A resinous, vitreous, brown, red, or yellow, opaque yttrium phosphate (YPO_4), crystallizing in the tetragonal system.

Xen-oc''ra-te'an, zen-oc'ra-tī'ąn, zen''o-crat'ic, a. Xen''o-crat'ic, Pertaining to or characteristic of the Greek philosopher Xenocrates (396–314 B. C.).

He postulated ideas or numbers to be the cause of nature's organic products, and derived these ideas from unity and plurality. His cosmology is based on Plato's Timæus.

xen''o-do-chi'um, zen'o-do-cī'um or -ci'um, n. [-CHI'A, pl.] 1. Class. Antiq. A lodging-house for strangers. 2. In modern Greece, a hotel; an inn. 3. A lodging-room in a monastery for pilgrims or strangers; a house under religious care for the reception of strangers. [LL., < Gr. xenodocheion, < xenos, guest, + dechomai, receive.] xen''o-do-che'um‡.

xen''o-ma'ni-a, etc. See XENO-.

Xen-o'mi, zen-ō'mai (zē-nō'mai, C.; zen'o-mai, W.), n. pl. Ich. An order or suborder of fishes with a cartilaginous coracoscapular plate in place of hypercoracoid and hypocoracoid, as in Dallioidæ. [< XEN- + Gr. ōmos, shoulder.] — xen-o'me, n. — xen-o'mous, a.

Xen-oph''a-ne'an, zen-of'a-nī'an, a. Of, pertaining to, or characteristic of the Greek philosopher Xenophanes of Colophon, founder of the Eleatic school (6th cent. B.C.).

He taught in his poems the doctrine of "the one all-controlling Godhead," and protested against the anthropomorphic representations of God by Homer and Hesiod.

Xen''u-ri'næ, zen'u-raī'nī or -rī'nē, n. pl. Mam. A subfamily of dasypodoid armadillos with third as well as fourth and fifth metacarpals short and broad; tatouays or cabassous. Compare illus. under ARMADILLO.

A Xenurine, the Common Cabassou (Xenurus unicinctus). 1/14

xen'yl, zen'il, W.[1] (zī'nil, W.[2]), n. Chem. The ultimate radical of xenylenic derivatives. [< XEN- + -YL.] — xen''yl-en'ic, a. Pertaining to or derived from certain diphenyl compounds. xen-yl'ic‡.

xer'a-fin, zer'ą-fin, n. A silver coin at one time issued in Goa, India, by Portuguese authority: value about 75 cents. [< Pg. xerafim, < Ar. ashrafī, < sharīf, lofty.]

xe-ran'sis, zę-ran'sis, n. The state of being or becoming dried up or desiccated. [< Gr. xēransis, < xēros, dry.] — xe-ran'tic, a. Same as EXSICCANT.

xer'a-phim, zer'ą-fim, n. A money of account formerly used in Bombay, India: valued at about 9 annas. Compare XERAFIN. [< Pg. xerafim; see XERAFIN.]

xe-ra'si-a, zę-rē'si-ą or zē-rą'si-ą (ze-rē'zi-ą, E.; -si-a, S.; -zhe-ą, W.), n. Pathol. A morbid dryness of the hair in which it ceases to grow and becomes dusty in appearance. [< Gr. xērasia, dryness, < xēros, dry.]

xer'es, zer'es, I. W. (-iz, E.), n. [Sp.] Sherry, especially that made in the district of Xeres, Spain.

xer-if', n. Same as SHERIF.

xer-iff', zer-if', E. (zer'if, W.), n. [Turk.] 1. A gold coin at one time current in Turkey and Egypt: value about $2.30. 2. The ducat formerly used in Morocco: a local name.

xero-, xer-. Derived from Greek xēros, dry: combining forms. — xe''ro-col-lyr'i-um, n. Pharm. A dry collyrium or eye-salve. — xe''ro-der'mi-a, n. 1. A morbid dryness of the skin due to diminished secretion of the sebaceous glands; dermatoxerasia. 2. Same as ICHTHYOSIS. xe''ro-der'ma‡. — xe''ro-myc-te'ri-a, n. Morbid dryness of the nasal passages. — xe-rom'y-ron, n. Any dry or solid ointment. xe-rom'y-rum‡. — xe'ro-nate, n. A salt of xeronic acid. — xe-ron'ic, a. Of or pertaining to a dry compound derived from citraconic acid. — xeronic acid, a compound ($C_5H_{12}O_4$) known chiefly by its salts, as the calcium xeronate. Called also diethyl furmuric acid. — xe-roph'a-gy, n. The eating of dry food: the term applied by Greek and Latin ecclesiastical writers to describe certain fasts practised by the early Christians. xe''ro-pha'gi-a‡. — xe'ro-phil, n. Bot. A plant adapted to drought. — xe-roph'i-lous, a. Bot. Loving drought; said of plants especially adapted to living in dry, hot climates, as the cactus, the bean-caper family, the fig-marigold family, etc.; specifically, belonging to the xerophils. — xe''roph-thal'mi-a, n. Inflammation with thickening of the lining membrane of the eye, but without discharge: due to atrophy of the conjunctiva; lippitude. xe-ro'ma‡. xe''roph-thal'my‡. — xe''ro-sto'mi-a, n. Abnormal dryness of the mouth and fauces. — xe''ro-trip'sis, n. Treatment by friction or dry rubbing, to excite action of the skin. xe''ro-trib'i-a‡.

xe-ro'des, zę-rō'dīz or -dēz, n. Pathol. Any dry tumor. [< Gr. xērōdēs, dryish, < xēros, dry, + eidos; see -OID.]

xe-ro'ma, zę-rō'mą, n. Same as XEROPHTHALMIA. [< Gr. xēros, dry.]

xe-ro'sis, zę-rō'sis, C., n. Pathol. A condition of abnormal dryness of a part; specifically, a dry, harsh, thickened, and scaly condition of the skin or mucous membrane of a part. [< Gr. xērōsis, < xēros, dry.]

xe'ro-tes, zē'ro-tīz, C. E., or zē'ro-tēs (ze-rō'tīz, W.), n. Pathol. A dry constitutional diathesis or habit of body. [< Gr. xērotēs, < xēros, dry.] — xe-rot'ic, a.

xi, zī or sī, n. [Gr.] The fourteenth letter in the Greek alphabet [Ξ, ξ]: equivalent to English x or z.

Xi-ca'que, hī-cā'kē, n. A middle American linguistic stock. See AMERICAN. Xi-ca'quan‡.

xiph-, xiphi-, xipho-. Derived from Greek xiphos, sword: combining forms. — xiph''i-plas'trai, a. Of or pertaining to a xiphiplastron. — xiph''i-plas'tron, n. Herp. One of the last pair of plates in the typical chelonian plastron. See illus. under PLASTRON. — xiph''i-ster'nal, a. Of or pertaining to the xiphisternum. — xiph''i-ster'num, n. 1. The lower segment or ensiform process of the sternum. 2. Herp. The xiphiplastron. — Xiph''i-su'ra, n. pl. Crust. The Xiphosura. Xiph''i-u'ra‡. — xiph''i-su'ran, a. & n. — Xiph''o-cer'i-dæ, n. pl. Entom. A family of saltatorian orthopters with ensiform antennæ, often united with Acrididæ. Xiph-oc'e-ra, n. (t. g.) — xiph''o-cer'id, a. & n. — xiph-oc'er-oid, a. — Xiph'o-don, n. Mam. 1. A genus typical of Xiphodontidæ. 2. [x-] A fossil artiodactyl of this genus. — Xiph''o-don'ti-dæ, n. pl. Mam. An Eocene family of anoplotherioid ungulates with an anterior intermediate molar tubercle and 2 or 4 digits. — xiph''o-don'tid, n. — xiph''o-don'toid, a. & n. — xiph-op'a-gus, n. A double monster united from the xiphoid appendage of the sternum to the umbilicus, as were the Siamese twins. xiph''o-did'y-mus‡. — xiph''o-phyl'lous, a. Bot. Having sword-shaped leaves. — xiph''o-ster'num, n. Same as XIPHISTERNUM.

Xiph'i-as, zif'i-as, n. 1. Astron. The constellation Dorado. See CONSTELLATION, 74. 2. Ich. (1) A genus typical of Xiphiidæ. (2) [x-] A fish of this genus; a swordfish. 3†. [x-] A comet shaped like a sword. [< L. xiphias, swordfish, < Gr. xiphias, < xiphos, sword.] — Xiph-i'i-dæ[1], n. pl. Ich. A family of acanthopterygian fishes, especially Scombroidea with a sword-like rostrum, moderate dorsal, and no ventrals; swordfishes. — xiph-i'id, n. — xiph'i-i-form'', a. 1. Having the form of a swordfish. 2. Of or pertaining to the Xiphiformes. — Xiph''i-i-for'mes, n. pl. Ich. A division of acanthopterygian fishes having the upper jaw a convenient weapon, including Xiphiidæ and Histiophoridæ. — xiph'i-oid[1]. 1. a. Of or pertaining to the Xiphiidæ; a swordfish. II. n. One of the Xiphiidæ; a swordfish.

Xiph'i-us, n. Same as ZIPHIUS.

— Xiph-i'i-dæ[2], n. pl. Mam. The Ziphiidæ. — xiph'i-oid[2], a. & n. Same as ZIPHIOID.

xipho-. See XIPH-.

xiph'oid, zif'oid, E. S. W. Wr.[1] (zai'foid, C. Wr.[2]) (XIII), a. Shaped like a sword; as, the xiphoid appendage, cartilage, or process (the lower extremity of the sternum). See illus. under OMPHALOPAGUS. [< Gr. xiphoeidēs, < xiphos, sword; and see -OID.] xiph-ol'di-an‡.

xiph'oid, n. The xiphoid process or xiphisternum. xiph-oi'des‡.

Xiph''os-u'ra, zif''os-ū'ra (-o-siū'ra, C. W.), n. pl. Crust. A division of merostomes variously ranked, especially an order having a horseshoe-shaped head-shield, abdominal segments consolidated, an ensiform tail, and bases of limbs serving as jaws: including king-crabs, etc. [< XIPHO-(s + Gr. oura, tail.] — xiph''os-u'ran, a. & n. — xiph''os-ure, n. — xiph''os-u'rous, a.

xiph-u'ra, zif-ū'ra (zai-fiū'-, C.), n. pl. Crust. The Xiphosura. — xiph-u'rous, a.

X'-leg'', ex'-leg'', n. Same as KNOCK-KNEE.

xo'a-non, zō'ą-nen, n. [-NA, pl.] Gr. Antiq. A primitive statue, generally of wood, regarded with peculiar veneration as having fallen down from heaven or being the work of a superhuman being: gradually covered with ivory and gold, thus originating the chryselephantine style of sculpture. [< Gr. xoanon, < xeō, scrape.]

xyl-. Same as XYLO-.

xyl-am'id, zail-am'id, -id or -aid, n. Chem. A xyl-am'ide, white crystalline compound ($C_8H_{11}NO$) obtained from xylic acid, of which it is an amido-derivative. [< XYLIC + AMID, AMIDE.]

xyl-an'thrax, zail-an'thrax, n. Wood-coal; charcoal: so called in distinction from mineral coal. [< XYL- + Gr. anthrax, coal.]

Xy-la'ri-a, zai-lē'ri-ą or zi-lą'ri-ą, n. Bot. A genus of saprophytic ascomycetous fungi having branched or simple, threadlike, cylindric, or clavate stromata. [< Gr. xylon, wood.]

xy'late, zai'lēt, n. Chem. A salt of xylic acid.

xy'lem, zai'lem, n. Bot. The inner part of a medullary ray — the part contained in the xylem. [< Gr. xylon, wood.] — xy'lem-ray'', n. Bot. A ray or plate of xylem between two medullary rays. x.-plate‡.

> In the true woody plants . . . the substance of the xylem-rays is occasionally more resistent than that of the wood bundles, and while the latter become destroyed by rotting, the former remain behind, constituting to a certain extent a skeleton of radially disposed plates. SACHS Lect. on the Phys. of Plants p. 159. [OXF. '87.]

xy'lene, zai'lin, n. Chem. Any one of three isomeric colorless liquid hydrocarbons (C_8H_{10}) contained in coal- and wood-tar, called ortho-, para-, and meta-xylenes, according to their derivation from the benzene nucleus. [< Gr. xylon, wood.] xyl'ol‡.

xy'len-ol, zai'len-ōl, n. Chem. Any one of six isomeric dimethyl phenols (C_8H_9OH): all white crystalline salts made by synthesis. [< XYLENE + -OL.]

xy-let'ic, zai-let'ic, a. Chem. Of, pertaining to, or derived from xylenol. — xyletic acid, a white crystalline compound ($C_9H_{10}O_3$) formed by treating xylenol with sodium and carbon dioxid.

xyl''har-mon'i-ca, zil''hār-men'i-cą, n. Mus. A variety of xylosistron. [< XYL- + HARMONICA.]

xy'lic, zai'lic, a. Chem. Of, pertaining to, or derived from xylene. — xylic acid, either one of two isomeric crystalline compounds ($C_9H_{10}O_2$), distinguished as xylic and paraxylic acids.

xy-lid'ic, zi-lid'ic, a. Chem. Of, pertaining to, or derived from xylic acid. — xylidic acid, a white flocculent amorphous compound ($C_9H_8O_4$) obtained variously, as by the oxidation of xylic acid.

xy'li-din, zai'li-din, -din or -doin, n. Chem. Any xy'li-dine, one of six isomeric amido-derivatives of xylene having the common formula $C_8H_{11}N$. Three are derived from metaxylene, two from orthoxylene, and one from paraxylene. They yield coloring-substances.

Xy-lin'i-dæ, zi-lin'i-dī or -dē, n. pl. Entom. A family of noctuid moths with robust thorax, simple antennæ, moderate palpi, and oblong rings with longitudinal markings; shark-moths. Xy-li'na, n. (t. g.) [< Gr. xylinos, wooden, < xylon, wood.]

— xy-lin'id, a. & n. — xy-lin'oid, a.

xylo-, xyl-. Derived from Greek xylon, wood: combining forms. — xy''lo-bal'sa-mum, n. The dried wood, especially twigs, of the Oriental balm-of-Gilead tree. — xy'lo-carp, n. A hard, woody fruit, or a plant bearing such a fruit. — xy''lo-car'pous, a. Having a hard, woody fruit. — xy-lo'co-pa, n. A carpenter-bee. — xy'lo-gen, n. 1. Same as LIGNIN. 2. Specifically, nascent woody fiber. — xy-log'ly-phy, n. The art of carving on wood, especially the art of carving designs or characters for the ornamentation of books. — xy-lo'pal, n. Mineral. Same as WOOD-OPAL. — xy-loph'a-ga[1], n. A wood-boring pholadoid bivalve (genus Xylophaga). — Xy-loph'a-ga[2], n. pl. Entom. 1. A tribe or series of hymenopterous insects having abdomen connate with thorax and anterior tibiæ with single apical spurs, as Uroceridæ. 2. A division of rhynchophorous beetles. — xy-loph'a-gan, I. a. Of or pertaining to the Xylophaga. II. n. One of the Xylophaga, Xylophagi, or Xylophagidæ. — xy-loph'age, n. A xylophagous insect. — Xy-loph'a-gi, n. pl. Entom. A family of beetles now arranged with Bostrichidæ and Mycetophagidæ. — Xy''lo-phag'i-dæ, n. pl. Entom. A family of brachycerous dipters having costal vein of nearly uniform width, round tip of wing, and alulæ very small. Xy-loph'a-gus, n. (t. g.) Xy''lo-phag'i-des‡. — xy''lo-phag'id, a. & n. — xy-loph'a-goid, a. — xy'lo-phi'a-gous, a. 1. Feeding on or boring in wood, as insect-larvæ, mollusks, or crustaceans. 2. Of or pertaining to the Xylophaga. — Xy-loph'i-li, n. pl. Entom. A family of beetles now united with Scarabæidæ, represented by Dynastes, Rutela, etc. — xy-loph'i-lan, n. — xy-loph'i-lous, a. Living or growing on decayed wood, as certain fungi or insects. — xy''lo-py-rog'ra-phy, n. The art of drawing and shading pictures on wood by means of a hot iron; the making of poker-pictures. — xy''lo-quin'one, n. Any one of three isomeric yellow crystalline compounds ($C_6H_8O_2$) obtained from xylene by oxidation. They are designated as orthoxyloquinone, metaxyloquinone, and paraxyloquinone. — xy''lo-re'tin-ite, n. Mineral. A massive, white, friable hydrocarbon derivative ($C_{42}H_{58}O_5$) found in fossil pine wood from marshes. xy''lo-re'tin-iue‡. — xy''lo-sis'tron, n. A musical instrument, resembling the euphonium, invented by Uthe in 1807. See EUPHONIUM, 2. — xy-los'te-in, n. A white, bitter, crystalline compound contained as a glucosid in the berries of the British fly-honeysuckle. — xy''lo-stro'ma, n. Bot. A mass of closely felted plates or sheets of mycelium found under the bark of trees, etc., and believed to be the sterile condition of some polyporus. — xy''lo-stro'ma-toid, a. — xy'lo-tile, n. Celluloid: formerly so called. 2. A brown, fibrous, altered asbestos. — xy-lot'o-mous, a. Adapted to cutting wood, as an insect. — Xy''lo-tro'gi, n. pl. Entom. A tribe of serricorn beetles with long body and subglobular head, including lymexylonids, cupesids, and rhyssodids.

A Xylocopa (an American carpenter-bee, Xylocopa virginica), and Nest (a), opened to show cells and eggs.

xy-lo'di-um, zi-lō'di-um, n. [-DI-A, pl.] Bot. 1. The peculiar unsymmetrical one-seeded fruit of plants of the genus Anacardium. 2. Same as ACHENIUM. [< Gr. xylōdēs, woody, < xylon, wood, + eidos, form.]

xy-log'ra-fy, n. Xylography. PHIL. Soc.

xy'lo-graph, zai'lo-grąf, n. 1. An engraving on wood or a print from such engraving, especially a primitive form. 2. An impression obtained from the grain of wood, as used for surface decoration. [< XYLO- + -GRAPH.]

xy-log'ra-pher, zai-leg'ra-fęr, n. One skilled in xylography.

xy''lo-graph'ic, xy''lo-graph'ic-al, zai'lo-graf'ic, -ąl, a. 1. Of, pertaining to, or of the nature of xylography. 2. Specifically, of or pertaining to engraving on wood.

> The government has opened an extensive printing office in Peking, and its example will encourage native booksellers to unite typography with xylographic printing. S. WELLS WILLIAMS Middle Kingdom vol. i, ch. 10, p. 604. [S. '83.]

3. Adapted to or used in xylography; as, xylographic designs; xylographic tools.

xy-log'ra-phy, zī-log'rə-fi, n. 1. Wood-engraving, especially of the 15th century. 2. Printing with wood-engravings. 3. Painting or printing on wood for decorative purposes. 4. The making of prints or impressions showing the grain of wood.

xy'loid, zī'loid, a. Of, pertaining to, or resembling wood. [< Gr. xyloeidēs, < xylon, wood; and see -OID.]

xy-lol'din, zī-lol'din, n. A high explosive made by the action of strong nitric acid on starch. [< XYLOID.]

in-tram'i-din‡; py-rox'am‡; xy-lin'din‡; xy-lol'dine‡.

xyl'ol, zail'ōl, n. Chem. Same as XYLENE. [< XYL- + -OL.]

xy'lo-nite, n. Same as CELLULOID. [< Gr. xylon, wood.]

xy'lo-phone, zī'lo-fōn, n. 1. A musical instrument consisting of a row of parallel wooden bars graduated in length so as to form a scale and connected by a non-conducting material. The tones are produced by striking with small mallets or by rubbing. Called also wood harmonicon. 2. An instrument used to determine the vibratory properties of different woods. [< XYLO- + Gr. phōnē, sound.]

A Modern Xylophone.

xyl'yl, zail'il, n. Chem. A radical (C_8H_9) believed to exist in xylene. [< XYL- + -YL.]

xyl'yl-ene, zail'il-īn, n. A radical (C_8H_8) contained in xylene.

Xy-nœ'ci-æ, zī-nī'si-ī or zī-nēi'-ci-ē, n. pl. Gr. Antiq. An Athenian festival in honor of Athena and commemorating the union of the Attic demes into one commonwealth: instituted by Theseus and celebrated in July. [< Gr. xynos, common, + oikos, house.] Me-tœ'ci-æ‡.

An Original African Xylophone—a portable Marimba.

xy-rich'thys, zī-ric'this, n. A razor-fish (genus Xyrichthys). [< Gr. xyron, razor, + ichthys, fish.] zy-rich'thys‡.

Xyr'i-da'ce-æ, zir'i-dā'si-ī or -dē'ce-ē, n. pl. Bot. An order of rush-like monocotyledonous plants—the yellow-eyed grass family—having equitant leaves sheathing the base of a naked scape, which bears a head of perfect triandrous flowers. Xy'ris, the type genus, is made up of the yellow-eyed grasses. [< Gr. xyris, kind of iris, < xyron, razor, < xyō, scrape.] Xy-rid'e-æ‡.— xyr"i-da'ceous, a.

The Caprfruited Xyris (Xyris operculata).

xyst, zist, n. 1. Class. Antiq. A hall or covered portico used by athletes for their exercises: chiefly for use in stormy weather.

If we had entered Jerusalem in the time of Herod, we should have found a city of a Græco-Roman character, with theatre, xystus, prætorium.
H. CROSBY Bible View of Jewish Church lect. xiii, p. 208. [P. & W. '88.]

2. A garden walk or terrace.

I chose places for rhododendron-beds, and directed the workmen to set creepers in my xystus.
MACAULAY in Trevelyan's T. B. Macaulay vol. ii, ch. 14, p. 336. [H.]

Y y Roman. 𝔜 𝔶 Black Letter. 𝒴 𝓎 Script.

Y[1], y, wai, n. [WYES, Y's, or Ys, waiz, pl.] 1. A letter; the twenty-fifth in the English alphabet. (1) Consonant y, in Bell's "Visible Speech" ⓨ: the sign of middle-tongue consonant movement made vocal by i sound, opening as in ye, you, closing as in ay unrecognized in standard English), syllabic as in French fille, fi'y. It is a continuous consonant, lingual, palatal, sonant, voiced, a semivowel, sometimes called a spirant or fricative.

The mouth having been set for i (see I), the tongue is raised to and opened from a consonant rustle with i sonancy before or after another vowel. The special movement of the tongue is needed before i sound as in ye = yi; but before other vowels the opening of the tongue from the simple i position has a consonantal effect: ia, io, iu sound very much like ya , yo , yu , and many languages, as Latin, write the same letter for both i and y, as do some English phonetists.

ⓞ. If similar movements are made with the vocal cords open, surd breath will be blown into the i chamber, and produce a surd y. Visible Speech ⓞ, as in the pronunciation commonly given of hue, hyū (see U); so also after other surds, as ty > ch, sy > sh; nature, nē'tyūr > nē'chur, Asia, ē'syə > ē'shə.

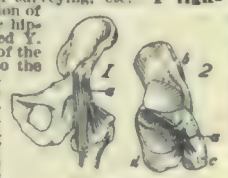
The rare initial y's of modern English print are mostly of ancient Teutonic descent or of late introduction from strange speeches; a larger number are spoken in words from Latin or Greek beginning with u, eu, unite, yū-nīt'; eulogy, yū'lō-ji. Medial y sounds are mostly unwritten, or written with i or e: union, yūn'yun, recognized mostly as beginning syllables. See U. The frequent interchange of i and y and their influence in phonetic changes is a fertile field in philology. See I.

In the pronunciation of this Dictionary y is used only to represent the consonant sounds as above described, Visible Speech ⓨ ⓞ.

(2) Vowel y is now a mere calligraphic variation of i, used regularly for final -i, -ie: cilie > city, pl. cities; used also in words from Greek for upsilon (υ), not iota (ι).

The Greek y was at first u, but thinned towards i, and in classic times had the mixed /ü − i/ sound of French u, German ü. It was added in the second century B. C. to the Roman alphabet, and passed on to the Anglo-Saxon with the same sound. In middle English it suffered further procession to simple i, and, being a favorite with the penmen for its final flourish, often displaced the old i. In its present use vowel y is a phonetic superfluity, and is not used in the Scientific alphabet, in the pronunciation of this Dictionary.

(3) Y = th. Y looks somewhat like Anglo-Saxon Þ = th, and is used for it in imperfect printing of early English. The abbreviations y^e^, y^t^, for the, that, are still used in literature affecting the antique.



According to the examination of Professor Whitney, the sound of the semivowel y averages 66 of one per cent. on the pages of English literature. W. D. WHITNEY Oriental and Linguistic Studies second series, p. 274. [S. '74.]

Capital Y is from Anglo-Saxon Y < Latin Y < Greek Υ, upsilon, for whose earlier history see U. Anglo-Saxon y had a dot over it. The rune for y was a combination of the runes for u and i, the 27th in the futhorc, third of the six added by the Anglo-Saxons, and named ȳr = ür, heu[2], n. The Latin and French name, following the sound of the letter, is ü, that is, nearly üi < English wi > (regularly) wai, written wy. The name of the Anglo-Saxon letter for i consonant whose sound y has now taken was gēr, year, or later gefu, gift. For lower case, black letter, dates, etc., see F and W.

2. An abbreviation. (1) Year. (2) See Appendix. 3. A symbol noting: (1) In medieval Roman notation, 150; with a dash over it (Ȳ), 150,000. (2) [y] Math. (a) The second unknown quantity or variable. (b) In analytical geometry, an ordinate. (3) Chem. Sometimes, yttrium: see ELEMENT.

yeand, pp. Yeaned. PHIL. SOC.

yean'ling, yēn'ling, n. The young of a goat or sheep: used also attributively.

year, yir, n. 1. The period of time in which the seasons go through their changes, or in which the earth completes a revolution around the sun. As this period is not an exact number of days, and as its length may be defined in various ways, there are many kinds of year, of which the following are the principal:

(1) The solar, tropical, or equinoctial year, the period between two passages of the sun through the same equinox, which determines the changing seasons. Its length is 365 days, 5 hours, 48 minutes, 46 seconds. (2) The sidereal y., the period of 365 days, 6 hours, 9 minutes, 9 seconds, in which the sun apparently returns to the same stars. It is 20 minutes and 23 seconds longer than the tropical year, owing to the precession of the equinoxes among the stars. (3) The common y. of 365 days, the nearest integral number of days to the solar year; the length of all the years of our calendar that are not leap-years. See LEAP-YEAR. (4) The embolistic or lunar y. of 13 lunar months, one month being added at intervals to make the mean length that of the solar year, as in the Jewish calendar. (5) The wandering y., either the lunar year or that of 365 days: so called because in the course of time it will begin successively at each one of the seasons. vague y.‡. See also phrases, as under CALENDAR, GREGORIAN, and JULIAN, and below.

2. The period of time during which a planet revolves around the sun; as, the year of Mars or Jupiter.

According to the Neptunian calendar, it is only thirty-six years since the creation of Adam.
E. F. BURR Ecce Cœlum lect. iv, p. 104. [N. & N. '70.]

3. A period of about 365 days used as a unit of time, particularly in civil and religious reckoning; in such usage divided into 12 months, and now reckoned as beginning January 1 and ending December 31; hence, any period of 12 months; as, a year from May 1; a year elapsed.

In the usage of law, a year is 365 days from any given date; half a year consists of 182 days, and a quarter of a year of 92 days (in New York) or 91 days (in England). The additional day in leap-year and the day immediately preceding are reckoned as one day.

4. pl. Length or time of life; age; sometimes, specifically, old age; as, he is very young-looking for his years.

The wandering sons of the American forests showed the deepest respect to years. LYDIA H. SIGOURNEY Letters to Mothers letter xix, p. 235. [H. '42.]

yeast, yist, vi. To ferment.

yeast, n. 1. A fungous growth (Saccharomuces) consisting of minute vegetable cells that collect together, forming a yellow, frothy, viscous substance that develops or increases by germination in contact with saccharine liquids, producing alcoholic fermentation, also (invariably), some succinic acid and glycerin; barm.

Cells of the Yeast of Beer (Saccharomyces Cerevisiæ).

Yeast is used to induce fermentation, in which process alcohol and carbon dioxid are produced, as in the brewing of beer and the raising of bread. These products impart the stimulating and sparkling qualities to the beer, while the carbon dioxid produces porosity in bread, the alcohol usually being dissipated. It was estimated in 1858 that in London alone more than 300,000 gallons of alcohol evolved in the making of bread was lost. The portion of the yeast that sinks to the bottom during fermentation at a temperature ranging from 32° to 45° F. is called bottom or sediment yeast, in distinction from that on the surface, which rises at a temperature of about 65° to 70° F., and is called surface or top yeast. Yeast also yields on fermentation acetic and lactic acids, which property is taken advantage of in the manufacture of white lead.

yes, yes, adv. As you say; truly; just so: a reply of affirmation or consent; opposed to no, and equivalent to a repetition of the words of a question or command in the form of an assertion; as, "Have you dined?" "Yes" (I have dined); "Come here!" "Yes" (I come); "Will he speak?" "Yes" (he will speak). The word is sometimes used to enforce by repetition or addition something that precedes; as, you slept; yes, you slept soundly: also with a rising inflection as equivalent to "It may be so," or "I hear, and what more?"; used sometimes as the sole response in conversation, a condemnable usage. [< AS. gese, gise, prob. < gĕā, yea, + sī, be it so, or + swa, so.]

'Yes!' she would reply encouragingly, . . . and 'Yes!' conclusively, like an incarnation of stupidity dealing in monosyllables.
MEREDITH Beauchamp's Career vol. iii, ch. 10, p. 185. [C. & H. '76.]

yet, yet, adv. 1. In addition; besides; further: often with a comparative; as, there is more evidence yet to be offered.

What has he to gain yet, who has gained heaven? W. G. SCHAUFFLER Last Days of Christ pt. i, ch. 9, p. 179. [J. P. J. '54.]

2. Before or at some future time; eventually; as, he will yet succeed. 3. In continuance of a previous state or condition; still; as, while it was yet morning; I hear him yet. 4. At the present time; now; as, do not go yet. 5. After all the time that has or had elapsed; as, I waited until nine, and the train had not yet arrived; are you not ready yet? 6. Up to the present time; heretofore: commonly with a negative; as, he has never yet told a lie.

It is even yet true that the world by wisdom knows not God.
J. T. PECK Central Idea of Christianity ch. 4, p. 184. [M. D. '56.]

7. Than that which has been previously affirmed; still: with a comparative, and either immediately before it or at the end of the sentence; as, silver is a yet better conductor of electricity; it was hot yesterday, to-day it is hotter yet.

Suppression of truth is a yet subtler character of falsehood.
E. B. PUSEY Minor Prophets, Amos vii, 17 vol. i, p. 320. [F. & W.]

8. As much as; even; as, they would not believe the reports, nor yet the evidence. [< AS. gīt, now.]

Synonyms: besides, further, hitherto, now, still, thus far. Yet and still have many closely related senses, and, with verbs of past time, are often interchangeable; we may say "while he was yet a child," or "while he was still a child." Yet, like still, often applies to past action or state extending to and including the present time, especially when joined with as; we can say "he is feeble as yet," or "he is still feeble," with scarcely appreciable difference of meaning, except that the former statement implies somewhat more of expectation than the latter. Yet with a negative applies to completed action, often replacing a positive statement with still: "he is not gone yet" is nearly the same as "he is here still." Yet has a reference to the future which still does not share; "we may be successful yet" implies that success may begin at some future time; "we may be successful still" implies that we may continue to enjoy in the future such success as we are winning now.

—as yet, same as YET, 5.

yet, conj. 1. Nevertheless; notwithstanding; as, I speak to you peaceably, yet you will not listen. 2. But; as, he is willing, yet unable. 3. Although; as, active, yet ill. 4. Though such be the case; nevertheless; as, rude, yet not unkind.

—of yore, of old time.

To multitudes in days of yore songs were the only literature.
H. GILES Illustrations of Genius, Music p. 162. [T. & F. '59.]

yore†, adv. In time past; in old time; long ago.

Yore'dale rocks. Geol. The upper beds of the English Carboniferous limestone series, or those lying between the Carboniferous limestone proper and the millstone grit. They contain celebrated lead-mines. See chart at GEOLOGY. [< Yoredale, in Yorkshire, Eng.]

york'er, yŏrk'ĕr, n. Cricket. A ball that first strikes the ground a few feet in front of the wicket.

The bowler . . . should in the first two or three overs try every effective ball he knows — and certainly in the first over he should try a 'yorker.' This ball, called in days gone by a 'tice,' an abbreviation of 'entice,' is certainly one of the most deadly balls that can be bowled. STEEL AND LYTTELTON in Badminton Library, Cricket ch. 3, p. 132. [L. G. & CO. '88.]

[< Yorkshire, Eng.] tice‡.

York'ish, yŏrk'ish, a. 1. Of or pertaining to the city or county of York, England. 2. Adhering to or favoring the house of York. See YORKIST.

York'ist, yŏrk'ist, n. An adherent of the house of York as opposed to the Lancastrians, especially in the Wars of the Roses. See ROSE.

York'shire, yŏrk'shir, *E. W.*¹ Wr. (-shĭr, *W.*²) (XIII), n. A county in the north of England: used in various phrases. —Yorkshire flannel, flannel made of undyed wool, manufactured in Yorkshire. —Y. grit, a grit from Yorkshire, used for polishing. —Y. pudding, a batter pudding baked in the same pan with and underneath the meat. —Y. stone (Geol.), a building-stone of the English millstone grit.

York use. Liturg. See USE, n., 5.

yor'lin, yŏr'lin, n. [Scot.] The yellowhammer. yor'ling‡.

yot, yet, vt. [Prov. Eng.] To unite closely; fasten.

yo'ta-cism, yō'tȧ-sizm, n. The forming of j (English y) or some other allied sound simultaneously with a continuous consonant made with the outer [front] part of the tongue, as s, r, l, as in the h sound in million. HALDEMAN Analytic Orthography § 520, p. 111. [L. '60.]

[< Gr. iōta; see IOTA.] jo'ta-cism‡.

—yo'ta-cize, yo'ta-cise, vt. To subject to yotacism, as a letter. jo'ta-cize‡; jo'ta-cise‡.

Spanish (South American) r in perro (dog) as distinguished from the common trilled r of pĕro (but) . . . may have arisen from an attempt to yotacise r.
HALDEMAN Analytic Orthography § 501a, p. 108. [L. '60.]

yote†, vt. To put water on; steep. [AS. geōtan, pour.]

you, yū, pron. The person, animal, or thing (as personified) addressed: the personal pronoun of the second person plural, used also in addressing a single person, originally as the pronomen reverentiæ to kings and the like, and still a plural of courtesy. You as a singular, in you was, attained much use, even literary, in the last century, but is now illiterate. You with the plural construction is the usual form of direct address — thee and thou having been displaced, except in special uses, in the singular, and ye as a plural being archaic (see these words); as, you are a man indeed; are you all here? you are Henry's dog, I think.

You is often used indefinitely, like one or they, for persons not specified; as, as you descend the mountain, you are surprised at the luxuriance of the foliage. You also occurs in reflexive use for yourself or yourselves; as, rest you here while I go in. [< AS. ēow, dat. and acc. of gē, ye.] youf, yuf, v. [Scot.] To bark.

youl†, vi. Same as YOWL.

young, yung, a. 1. Being in the early period of life or growth; not having reached mature age or development; having lived or existed a short or comparatively short time; not old; as, a young child or plant; a young nation.

I am not so young as I was once, and I don't believe I shall ever be, if I live to the age of Samson. B. P. SHILLABER Partingtonian Patchwork, Oracular Pearls xx, p. 168. [L. & S. '73.]

Mysterious Egypt, with her lessons of wisdom which were ancient when Greece was young.
W. I. KIP Early Conflicts of Christianity ch. 1, p. 30. [A. '50.]

2. Not having progressed far; having recently come into being or action; newly formed; as, the day was young; young ice; young love. 3. Of or pertaining to youth or early life; as, in his younger years.

They curse each other in the hearing of the young ears.
JOSEPH COOK Conscience lect. ix, prel., p. 232. [H. M. & CO. '79.]

4. Not infirm with age; full of vigor or freshness.

Some old people keep young at heart in spite of wrinkles and gray hairs. LOUISA M. ALCOTT Little Women vol. i, ch. 19, p. 277. [R. BROS. '69.]

5. Being without experience; ignorant; immature; as, young in wisdom. 6. [Colloq.] Denoting the younger of two having the same name or title; as, young George Smith. 7. [Austral.] Newly arrived. [< AS. geong, young.]

Synonyms: see FRESH; YOUTHFUL.

—young America [Colloq., U. S.], the rising generation, or its characteristic spirit or notions. —Y. England, a party of young English aristocrats who affected the manners and sentiments of the 17th and early 18th centuries, and were more or less one with a conservative political party in 1844. —Y. France, Spain, etc., progressive parties in various European countries, succeeding the French Revolution of 1830. —Y. Germany, a progressive literary school in Germany, following Heinrich Heine. —Y. Ireland, Irish followers of Daniel O'Connell, but not in his pacific policy. —Y. Italy, Italian followers of Mazzini, devoted to republican principles. —younger children (Eng. Law.), such children as are not entitled to the rights of an eldest son, including daughters who are even older than the eldest son. —young'-eyed'', a. Looking youthful.

—young'er†, n. A young person. —young'-erly, a. [Colloq., U. S.] Youngish. —young'head†, n. Youth. —young'ish, a. Not having reached middle life; rather young. —young'ly†, a. Like a young person; youthful. —young'ly†, adv. 1. In early life. 2. Weakly; ignorantly. —young'ness, n.

young, n. Offspring, especially of animals.

Mr. Agassiz has already secured quite a number of the singular type [of fish] of Acará, which carries its young in its mouth. MRS. AGASSIZ in Agassiz's Journey in Brazil ch. 7, p. 220. [T. & F. '68.]

—with young, with child; gravid.

young'ling, yung'ling, a. Young.

young'ling, n. 1. A young person, animal, or plant; in comparison, the youngest; as, "the youngling of the flock smiled upon its mother's knee." 2. An inexperienced person: used also attributively. [< AS. geongling, < geong, young.]

young'ster, yung'stĕr, n. 1. A young person; a child; youth; sometimes, also, a colt or other young animal.

Age brings experience; graybeards oft are wise.
But oh! how sharp a youngster's ears and eyes!
HOLMES The School-Boy st. 5.

2. [Colloq.] A junior officer in a military company.

youngth'†, n. Youth. —youngth'ly†, a. Youthful.

youn'ker, yun'kĕr, n. 1. A German squire; junker. 2. [Archaic or Colloq.] A youngster; stripling. 3. A young gentleman; knight. 4†. A dupe; novice. [< D. jonker, < jong, young, + heer, sir.] yun'ker‡.

you'pon, n. [Local, U. S.] Same as YAUPON.

your, yūr, pron. Belonging to you: the possessive case singular and plural of you; in use preceding the noun; as, is this your hat? your friend is here. Compare YOURS.

Your often merely generalizes the word following or makes it indefinite, being equivalent to an article or indefinite plural; as, your true man of the world never betrays himself (that is, "a true man" or "true men"). Formerly this use was much wider than at present.

Rich honesty dwells like a miser, sir, in a poor house, as your pearl in your foul oyster. SHAKESPEARE As You Like It act v, sc. 4.

[< AS. ēower, gen. of gē, you.]

yours, yūrz, pron. Possessive case of YOU: the form used when the noun is omitted, as to avoid repetition; as, is this (thing) yours? the prize is yours (that is, the prize is your prize). Yours is also used absolutely to mean: (1) That which belongs or all those who are related to you; as, may it be well with you and yours. (2) [Colloq.] Your letter, message, or other communication; as, yours of the 18th received. Compare YOU.

—yours respectfully, yours sincerely, etc., formal expressions in the subscription of a letter.

your-self', yur-self', n. [YOUR SELVES', yur-selvz', pl.] A reflexive and often intensive or emphatic form of the second-personal pronoun. See note under HIMSELF.

Be true to yourself, when yourself means honor. H. W. BEECHER Plymouth Pulpit, Nov. 3, '72 in vol. x, p. 465. [J. B. F. '73.]

your'ta, yourte, n. [F.] Same as YURT.

youse, yūz, n. [E. Ind.] The hunting-leopard: chetah.

youth, yūth, n. 1. The state or condition of being young; youthfulness; as, his youth was painfully apparent. 2. The period when one is young; usually, that part of life between childhood and manhood; adolescence; as, in the days of his youth.

In youth the heart exults and sings. LONGFELLOW Kéramos st. 17.

3. A young man; more rarely, a young woman: in this sense with plural; as, a youth of promise; several youths passed by: sometimes used collectively; as, the youth of the country.

The American youth have before them the most promising opportunities that have ever been enjoyed in any age or country.
H. WOOD Nat. Law in the Bus. World ch. 3, p. 48. [L. & S. '87.]

4†. Freshness; recentness. [< AS. geōgoth, < geong, young.]

—youth'hood, n. [Archaic.] The condition or period of being young; youth. youth'ede†; youth'head†. —youth'like, a. —youth'ly†, a. Pertaining to youth; youthful. —youth'ly†, adv. —youth'ness†, n. Youthfulness. —youth'some, a. [Rare.] Young in appearance or character; youthful. —youth'wort, n. The round-leaved sundew: an old name. —youth'y, a. [Rare.] Having youth; youthful; young.

youth'ful, yūth'ful, a. 1. Of or pertaining to youth; characteristic of or suited to youth; having the vigor or freshness of youth; hence, buoyant; as, youthful years; youthful dreams or follies; a youthful spirit.

Strength, enthusiasm, hope, purity, love,—all these when combined and embodied in their most attractive forms, rise in our imaginations as youthful attributes.
HOLLAND Gold-Foil ch. 9, p. 104. [S. '69.]

2. Having youth; being still young; not adult or aged; as, a youthful enthusiast. 3. Not far advanced; early; as, the youthful period of a literature.

Synonyms: boyish, childish, childlike, girlish, juvenile, puerile, young. Boyish, childish, and girlish are used in a good sense of those to whom they properly belong, but in a bad sense of those from whom more maturity is to be expected; childish eagerness or glee is pleasing in a child, but unbecoming in a man; puerile in modern use is distinctly contemptuous. Juvenile and youthful are commonly used in a favorable and kindly sense in their application to those still young; youthful may have a favorable import as applied to any age, as when we say the old man still retains his youthful ardor, vigor, or hopefulness; juvenile in such use would belittle the statement. See FRESH.—Antonyms: see synonyms for AGED.

youth'ful-li-ty, n. [Rare & Humorous.] Youthfulness.

Z

Z z — Roman. Black Letter. Script.

Z[1], z, zi, n. [ZEES, Z's, or Zs, ziz, pl.] 1. A letter: the twenty-sixth and last in the English alphabet; in Bell's "Visible Speech," ℨ: the sign of a hissing or buzzing consonant, beginning a syllable as in zeal, closing a syllable as in buzz, the vocal cords being close so as to vibrate, and the nose closed. It is called a sibilant, a lingual, a dental, a tongue tip, and a continuous sonant or voiced consonant, sometimes a fricative, a spirant, and a semivowel.

The vocal movements in making z and kindred sounds s, sh, zh, etc., are described under S. The sonant sibilant z is undistinguished in most languages. A character for it is given in scientific alphabets of the Parent Speech, but there is no such letter in Sanskrit, Greek, Latin, Anglo-Saxon; r appears where vowel assimilation changes s to a sonant (AS. wæs, wǣron, was, were), as if there were no z. No z is accepted as a Chinese sound. But the surd and the sonant sounds of any spirant are much alike. The Germans have trouble with them all. Other changes reveal a sonant s = z in Anglo-Saxon. But though z, which had sounded as dz in Greek, Latin, and Anglo-Saxon, is final in Old French, took its present sound in Middle English, and though its sound is one of the more frequent of English sounds (the 12th in frequency, 2.92 per cent.), z is still a comparatively rare letter in the print of 1890. It is found initial in a few words lately from Greek, and sometimes in -ze final from older English words. American authorities approve -ize oftener than English prior to the Oxford dictionary.

The sound z is oftenest a sonant assimilation of s medial or final, which is a living grammatical change in the inflection of nouns and verbs; the plural s of nouns and the personal ending s of verbs sound as z after a sonant, i. e., a vowel or b, d, g, l, m, n, r, v, etc.: presses, tubs, pads, rugs, loves, etc.; so also s between two sonants, unless steadied by accent: desire' = dezire', but des'ignate; so also x in ex- = egz-: exert = egzert', but ex'ecute. See X.

Zh, zhī, the sonant of sh, in Bell's "Visible Speech" ℩, is the last of the elementary sounds in the alphabet of the Spelling Reform Association. It is a sonant sibilant described under S. It is represented by s, z, or g = j: azure, seizure, gin, joy. It arises from a combination of the sounds of z + y. The earliest mention of it is said to be in 1668. It is the rarest English sound, and has not obtained special representation in any English word.

According to the examination made by Professor Whitney, the s sounds average 2.92 per cent., and the zh sounds .02 of one per cent., on the pages of English literature. W. D. WHITNEY Oriental and Linguistic Studies second series, p. 274. [S. '74.]

Z is an occasional letter in Anglo-Saxon (A. D. 900); common in Middle English (1340) and in French of that date, < Latin Z (1st cent. B. C.), < Greek Ζ. Early Greek Ⅱ < Phenician Ⅱ < Egyptian hieratic 𓏭 < hieroglyphic 𓄿𓏭, a duck. For lower case, black letter, script, dates, etc., see A. The Phenician letter is named Zayin > the Greek, Latin Zēta = dzēta > (in analogy with ess, eks, etc.) Old French edze = edz, and ézed > Early English ezed > izzard. From Latin Zeta comes also Old French zède > Eng. Zed, the common name still in England. Ze, zī, formed in analogy with be, ce, de, etc., is the common name in America. It was the seventh letter in Phenician, Greek, and Latin, but dropped from Latin in the 3d century B. C., and when it was restored to write Greek words in the 1st century B. C. it took its place at the end of the alphabet.

The history of the character may be represented thus:

Hieroglyphic Duck. Egyptian Hieratic. Phenician. Early Greek and Latin. Greek and Latin. English Script.

2. An abbreviation. See Appendix. 3. A symbol, noting in mathematics: (1) The third unknown quantity or variable. (2) The third point-coordinate, in analytical geometry of three dimensions, measured perpendicularly to the principal plane of reference.

Zend, zend, n. 1. The Bactrian or eastern branch of the old Iranian group of Aryan languages. Called also Old Bactrian. 2. Originally, a commentary or translation.

The name Zend is frequently, though wrongly, given to the language of the Avesta. No name for the language of the Parsi scriptures has yet been found in the Parsi books. Whenever the word Zend is used alone it means "commentary," and is applied to some Pahlavi translation, commentary, or gloss; and whenever the word Avesta is used alone it is applied to the Parsi scriptures in the original tongue.

The original language of the Parsi scriptures has usually been called Zend by European scholars, but this name has never been generally admitted by Parsi scholars. . . . For want of a better term, we may follow the example of most Parsi scholars in using the term Avesta for the language of the Avesta.
M. Haug Essays on the Parsis essay ii, p. 67. [tr. & co. '78.]

zen'dak, n. [Archaic.] Same as SENDAL. zen'del‡.

Zend"-A-ves'ta, zend"-ə-ves'tə, n. A collection of all extant documents containing the sacred writings of the religion of Zoroaster. It is still the "Bible" and Prayer-book of the Parsis. As we now have it, it consists of the Yaçna, the Vispered, the Vendidad, and the Khordah-Avesta.

The sacred writings of the Parsis have usually been called Zend-Avesta by European, but this is, without doubt, an inversion of the proper order of the words, as the Pahlavi books always style them Avistāk va Zand (Avesta and Zend) i. e., text and commentary].
M. Haug Essays on the Parsis essay iii, p. 119. tr. & co. '78.]

zen'dik, zen'dik, n. [Oriental.] A disbeliever in revealed religion; also, a practiser of magic. [< Ar. zendīq.] zen'dic‡.—zen'di-cism, n.

They were . . . generally fallen into Zendicism, an Error among the Arabs near of kin to the Sadducism of the Jews, as denying Providence, the Resurrection, and a Future State.
Prideaux Mahomet p. 13. [W. RO. 1697.]

ze'nick, zī'nik, n. [Afr.] A viverroid carnivore, the surricate. See illus. under SURICATE. ze'nik‡.

Zen'i-dæ, zen'i-dī or -dē, n. pl. Ich. Same as ZEIDÆ.

ze'nith, zī'nith or zen'ith (XIII). n. 1. The point in the celestial sphere that is exactly overhead; the point in which the plumb-line, extended upward, pierces the celestial sphere: opposed to nadir.

Whatever the English zenith may be, the horizon is almost always of a sombre colour.
Smith in S. J. Reid's Sydney Smith ch. 9, p. 213. [H. '85.]

2. The culminating-point of prosperity, influence, or greatness. [< F. zénith, < Sp. zenit, < Ar. semt, path.]

Synonyms: see ACME.
—geometric zenith, the point in which the line from the center of the earth through a point on its surface pierces the celestial sphere.—ze'nith-col'li-ma"tor, n. A collimator whose axis is vertical.—z.-distance, n. The angular distance of a heavenly body from the zenith: the complement of its altitude.—z.-sector, n. An instrument for measuring zenith-distances. See SECTOR.—z.-telescope, n. An instrument for measuring the difference of zenith-distance of two stars, one of which passes north and the other south of the zenith.
—ze'nith-al, a. Of or pertaining to the zenith.—ze'nith-ward, adv. Toward the zenith.

ze'noid, zī'noid, a. & n. Zeoid. [< ZEUS[2] (zen-) + -OID.]

Ze-no'ni-an, (zē-nō'ni-ən, zē-nōn'ie, a. Belonging or Ze-non'ic, relating to (1) Zeno of Elea (5th century B. C.), the inventor of dialectic, or to (2) Zeno of Citium (350–250 B. C.), founder of the Stoic sect. The former originated the paradoxes known as Achilles and the tortoise, the bushel of corn, the flying arrow, etc., based upon misconceptions of plurality and motion.

Ze-no'ni-an, n. A follower of Zeno the dialectician or of Zeno the Stoic.

ze'nu, zī'nū, n. The dzeren or goitered antelope.

ze'oid, zī'eid. I. a. Of or pertaining to the Zeidæ.
II. n. One of the Zeidæ. [< ZEUS[2] + -OID.]

ze'o-lite, zī'ō-lait, n. Mineral. A secondary mineral occurring in cavities and veins in eruptive rocks, usually a hydrous aluminum-sodium silicate, crystallizing in either the orthorhombic, monoclinic, or rhombohedral system. [< Gr. zeō, boil, + -LITE.] —ze"o-lit'ic, a. Of, pertaining to, or consisting of zeolites.—ze"o-lit'i-form, a. Resembling or having the form of a zeolite.—ze"o-lit"i-za'tion, n. The alteration process by which certain minerals are changed into zeolites.

Zeph"a-ni'ah, zef'ə-nī'ə, n. The ninth of the minor prophetic books of the Old Testament canon, named from its author, one of the later prophets of Judah during the monarchy, who lived in the latter part of the reign of Josiah and gave the initial impulse to the final attempt at the reformation of Judah. [< Heb. Tsephaniyah, 'whom Jehovah has hid,' < tsaphan, hide, + Yah, Jehovah.]

zeph'a-ro-vich"ite, zef'ə-rō-vich'ait, n. Mineral. A white, translucent, hydrous aluminum phosphate (H_6AlPO_6) found in crystalline to compact masses. [< Prof. Zepharovich.] zeph'yr, zef'ər, n. 1. The west wind; poetically, any soft, gentle wind. Compare ZEPHYRUS.

Zeph'i-roth, n. pl. Same as SEPHIROTH, plural of SEPHIRA.

If zephyrs come, so light they come,
Nor leaf is stirr'd nor wave is driven.
Moore Lalla Rookh, Fire-Worshippers pt. i, st. 1.

2. Worsted or woolen yarn of very light weight, used for embroidery and knitted hoods, shawls, etc.: specifically called zephyr worsted. 3. Figuratively, anything very light and airy. [< F. zéphire, < L. zephyrus, < Gr. zephyros, west wind.]
—zephyr biscuit, z. crackers, biscuit or crackers made unusually light and spongy: trade terms.—z. cloth, a fine light woolen cloth for women's wear, made in Belgium.—zeph'yr-flow"er, n. Any plant of the genus Zephyranthes, as the white zephyr-flower (Z. candida), which is called also the Peruvian swamp-lily.—z.-work, n. Embroidery or other work in zephyr worsteds.

Zeph"yr-an'thes, zef"ər-an'thīz or -thēs, n. Bot. A genus of mainly American bulbous plants of the amaryllis family (Amaryllidaceæ), having a few linear or loriform leaves and a fistulous scape bearing showy variously colored solitary flowers. Z. Atamasco is the atamasco-lily. [< Gr. zephyros, west wind, + anthos, flower.]

Zeph'y-rus, zef'i-rus, n. Class. Myth. The west wind: usually personified and represented as the mildest and gentlest of all the sylvan deities: identified by the Romans with Favonius. See Appendix. [L., < Gr. Zephyros, < zephyros, west wind.] Zeph'y-ros‡.

Mild as when Zephyrus on Flora breathes.
Milton P. L. bk. v, l. 16.

ze'quin, n. Same as SEQUIN. See table under COIN.

zer, zer, n. [Abys.] A form of hysteria.

zer'da, zer'də, n. [Afr.] The fennec (Vulpes zerda).

ze-re'ba, n. Same as ZAREBA. ze-rī'ba‡.

Ze-ren'i-dæ, zə-ren'i-dī or -dē, n. pl. Entom. A family of geometrid moths with entire broad wings and slender body; magpie-moths, etc. Ze-re'ne, n. (t. g.) [< Gr. xērainō, dry up, < xēros, dry.]
—ze-ren'id, a. & n.—ze-re'noid, a.

zer-mou'me-ah, zer-mū'mē-ä, n. A lacertoid lizard (Psammodromus algirus) of northern Africa.

ze'ro, zī'rō, n. 1. The Arabic numeral 0; a cipher; naught. In arithmetical notation the zero, though simply signifying absence of quantity in itself, serves to determine the position and hence the value of significant figures with which it is used. Placed on the right of such a figure it moves it one place up in the decimal scale, and hence multiplies it by ten; placed on the left, with a decimal point, it divides by ten. The principle of position, which is at the basis of modern notation, is thus rendered simple of application. The Greeks and Romans, having no zero, made little progress in arithmetic.

It would appear that the zero and the accompanying principle of position were introduced about the time of Aryabhatta. These are the inventions which give the Hindoo system its great superiority, its admirable perfection.
F. Cajori Hist. Mathematics, Hindoos p. 89. [macm. '94.]

2. Hence, the absence of quantity; nothing. 3. The point where a continuous function changes its sign from plus to minus, or vice versa. 4. The arbitrary point on a scale from which measures are counted, usually in opposite directions, especially that on a scale of temperature. See THERMOMETER.

The centigrade thermometer calls the point of melting ice, zero.
Youmans Hand-Book Household Science ¶ 18, p. 26. [A. '57.]

5. The lowest point in any standard of comparison; nullity; as, in my estimation they were far below zero. [< F. zéro, < It. zero, < Ar. sifr, zero.]
—absolute zero. see ABSOLUTE.—natural z. (Physics), the temperature to which the earth would fall were the heat of the sun withdrawn entirely.—ze'ro-ax"i-al, a. Having zero for each element of the principal diagonal: said of a determinant.—z. method, a null method. See NULL.—z.-magnet, n. A magnet used to bring the needle of a galvanometer, or some similar instrument, to the zero-point.—z.-point, n. The point indicating the zero of a scale of reckoning.

ze'ro-ness, zī'rō-nes, n. [Rare.] The state or quality of being at or near to zero in temperature.

A terrific northeaster, cold to zeroness.
New-York Times Dec. 26, '90, p. 1, col. 6.

Zer-ua'ne-A"ke-re'ne, zer-wā'nē-ä"kę-rē'nē, n. [Old Per.] 1. Among the later Parsis, the Supreme Being, above Ormuzd and Ahriman; in Zend, the endless time. Zer'van‡; Zer-va'na-a"ka-ra'na‡.

Zervana-akarana was held to designate a personal god, to whom was given the appellation 'Time without Bounds,' or 'Uncreated Time.' C. Hardwick Christ and Other Masters pt. iv, ch. 3, p. 329. [macm. '74.]

ze-rum'bet, zę-rum'bet, n. [E. Ind.] A drug, thought to be cassumunar: sometimes confounded with round zedoary.

zest, zest, vt. 1. To give a zest or relish to; make piquant; as, a zested wine. 2. To cut, as the peel of an orange or lemon, into segments, or to squeeze, as the peel, over anything.

zest, n. 1. Agreeable excitement of the mind accompanying exercise mental or physical; as, to pursue one's studies with zest; rivalry and the hope of excelling impart a zest to athletic exercises. 2. That which imparts such excitement. 3. An agreeable and piquant flavor in anything tasted, especially if added to the usual flavor, as that imparted to soups or wines by the essential oil of lemon- or orange-peel, or by spice; the enlivened relish so stimulated; figuratively, increase of enjoyment produced by the addition of any agreeable stimulant.

Attention and civility, a good cuisine, and good wine, . . . and the courteous attention of 'mine host' gave a new zest to his cookery and his claret. Hood Humorous Works, Visit to Wrigglesworth p. 414. [J. C. H.]

4. [Rare.] A piece of orange- or lemon-peel used to flavor anything, or the aromatic oil squeezed from it. 5. [Rare.] The woody thick outer shell or woody partitions of a walnut, or the membrane enclosing a separate part of an orange, lemon, etc. [< F. zeste, < L. schistos, cleft, < Gr. schistos, < schizō, divide.]

Synonyms: see APPETITE.

ze'ta[1], zī'tə or zē'tə, n. [Gr.] The sixth letter in the Greek alphabet [Z, ζ], in ancient Greek sounded zd or dz, in modern Greek tz; in modern Greek spelled zita.

ze'ta[2], n. Arch. 1. A small withdrawing-chamber; stove-room; parlor. 2. A room in a church used as a living-room by the sexton: usually over the porch. ze-tic'u-la‡. [LL., < Gr. dixēla, < Gr. diaita, dwelling.]

ze-tet'ic, zę-tet'ic, a. Given to or proceeding by inquiry. [< Gr. zētētikos, < zēteō, seek.]—the zetetic method (Math.), the analytic method used in endeavoring to discover solutions of unknown quantities.—z. school, the followers of Pyrrho, the Greek skeptic. See PYRRHONIST.

ze-tet'ic, n. A seeker: a name adopted by the Pyrrhonists or skeptical philosophers. See PYRRHONIST.

ze-tet'ics, zę-tet'ics, n. [Rare.] Math. That part of algebra that relates to the finding of unknown quantities.

Zeuc"to-cœ-lo'ma-ta, zūc'tō-sę-lō'mə-tə, n. pl. Zool. A section of metazoic animals with paired cœlomatic sacs or diverticula, including vertebrates, arthropods, worms, and mollusks. [< Gr. zeuktos, joined (< zeugnymi, join), + koiloma, a hollow, < koilos, hollow.]—zeuc"to-cœ'lo-mat'ic, zeuc"to-cœ-lo'mic, a.

zeu'gite, (zū'gait, zōi'gait, n. Gr. Antiq. A Greek zy'gite, (oarsman that rowed an oar of the middle bank or tier in a trireme. Compare THALAMITE; THRANITE. [< Gr. zygitēs, < zygon, yoke.]

Zeug'lo-don, zūg'lō-don, n. Mam. 1. A genus typical of Zeuglodontidæ.

The genus Zeuglodon, so named because the first section of a molar tooth examined was taken from the base of the crown, where it was beginning to divide into the two roots, and looked like two single teeth linked or yoked together.
Flower and Lydekker Mammals ch. 8, p. 246. [BL. '91.]

2. [z-] A fossil cetacean of this genus, of which remains have been found mostly in the southern United States Eocene. [< Gr. zeuglē, strap of a yoke (< zeugnymi, join), + odous (odont-), tooth.]

Zeug"lo-don'ti-a, zūg'lō-don'shi-ə or -don'ti-ə, n. pl. Mam. An extinct group of mammals generally ranked as a suborder of cetaceans, with molars 2-rooted. [< Gr. zeuglē (see ZEUGLODON) + odous (odont-), tooth.]

Zeug"lo-don'ti-dæ, zūg'lō-don'ti-dī or -don'ti-dē, n. pl. Mam. The only known family of Zeuglodontia, comprising species that lived in the Eocene period. [< ZEUGLODON.] Bas"i-lo-sau'ri-dæ‡.—zeug"lo-don'tid, n.—zeug"lo-don'toid, a. & n.

zeug'ma, zūg'mə, n. Gram. A figure in which an adjective or verb is made to govern two nouns, with only one of which it seems to be logically connected, the governing word being conceived to alter its meaning slightly as applied to the second noun: a form of brachylogy especially common in ancient Greek: distinguished from ellipsis in that there is no actual omission, the verb or adjective doing double duty. [L., < Gr. zeugma, < zeugnymi, join.] —zeug-mat'ic, a.

Zeu"go-bran'chi-a, zūi"gō-bran'ki-ə, n. pl. Conch. The Zygobranchia. [< Gr. zeugos, yoke (< zeugnymi, join), + branchia, gills.] Zeu"go-bran"chi-a'ta‡.

zeu'ner-ite, zoi'ner-ait, n. Mineral. A pearly, green, hydrous copper-uranium arsenate ($H_{14}CuU_2As_2O_{20}$), crystallizing in the tetragonal system. [After Prof. Zeuner, of Freiberg.]

Zeus[1], zūs, n. The supreme deity of the Greeks, answering to the Roman Jupiter. See illus. under JUPITER.

He was the son of Kronos and Rhea, husband of Hera (Juno), brother of Poseidon, Hades, Hestia, Demeter, and Hera, and father of Ares, Hephæstus, Hebe, Athena, the Hours, Fates, Graces, Muses, Apollo, Artemis, Persephone, Hermes, Dionysos, Heracles, etc. He presided over the gods on the Thessalian Olympus, and his principal shrines were at Olympia and Dodona, and in the Libyan desert. The Olympic and Nemean games were sacred to him. His attributes were the eagle, thunderbolt, and scepter. his type in art having been fixed by Phidias in his famous ivory-and-gold statue at Olympia. This represented him as a majestic bearded being, sitting enthroned and crowned with wild olive. The figure was 40 feet high. Locally, he was the god of rain, thunder, snow, and the bright sky, answering to the Sanskrit Dyaus.
[< Gr. Zeus, Zeus.]

zeux'ite, zūx'ait, n. Mineral. A ferriferous tourmalin.

Zeuxite . . . was found in 1814 in acicular interwoven crystals at Huel Unity, Cornwall. J. D. Dana Mineralogy ed. by E. S. Dana, § 426, p. 557. [w. & s. '92.]

[< Gr. zeuxis, joining, < zeugnymi, yoke.]

Zeu-zer'i-dæ, zīu-zer'i-dī or -dē, n. pl. Entom. The Cossidæ. Zeu-ze'ra, n. (t. g.) [< Gr. zeugnymi, join.] —zeu-ze'ri-an, a. & n.

zey'lan-ite, zī'lan-ait, n. Mineral. Same as CEYLONITE. [< G. Zeylan, Ceylon.]

zi"a'met", zī'ə'met', n. [Turk.] A large military fief under the Turkish feudal system: opposed to a timar, or small fief, and a beylik, or lordship. See SPAHI.

The larger fiefs or Ziamets comprehended upwards of 500 acres. . . . The general name for the holders of military fiefs was Spahi, a Cavalier. Creasy Ottoman Turks ch. 6, p. 101. [H. H. & co. '77.]

zib'el-ine, zib'el-in or -ain, a. [F.] Of or pertaining to the sable.

zib'el-ine‡, n. [F.] The fur of the sable. zib'el-line‡.

The inside is lined with skins of ermine and zibelline, of the highest value, especially the latter. Hugh Murray Travels of Marco Polo pt. i, § 23, p. 133. [s. m. & co. '44.]

zib'et, zib'et, n. A viverroid carnivore, the Asiatic or Indian civet (Viverra zibetha), with the black markings less distinct and the tail more ringed than the common civet. It is often domesticated. [< It. zibetto; see CIVET[1], n.] zib'eth‡.
—zib'et-um, n. A variety of civet from the zibet: used as medicine and perfume. zib'eth-um‡.

zic'zac, zic'zac, n. Same as SICSAC.

zie'ga, zī'gə, n. Curd formed in milk when acetic acid is added after rennet has ceased to produce coagulation.

zie"tri-si'kite, zī'tri-sī'kait, n. Mineral. A brown fossil wax resembling ozocerite. [< Zietrisika, in Moldavia.]

Zif, zif, n. A Hebrew month. See CALENDAR. [< Heb. ziv, < sachach, shine.]

zif'fi-us‡, n. A marine animal usually identified with the swordfish or xiphias.

zi-gan'ka, zi-gan'kə, n. [Rus.] A country-dance of Russia, or its music, usually quick, with a drone bass.

zig'ger, zig'gr, vt. Same as SICKER[2]. zig'hyr‡.

zig'zag", zig'zag', v. [ZIG'ZAGGED'; ZIG'ZAG'GING.]
I. t. To form or accomplish in a zigzag manner.

The faces of these cañons are so abrupt and steep that in a few places only can the sure-footed pack-mule zigzag its way up and down their dizzy heights.
C. B. Gillespie in Century Magazine Feb., '91, p. 537.

II. i. To form a zigzag, or move in a zigzag manner.

A line of gray snake-fence, that zigzags by A pond and cattle; from the homestead nigh.
C. G. C. Roberts The Potato Harvest l. 6.

zig'zag", a. Having a series of short alternating turns or angles from side to side, as a channel. zig'zag"gy‡.
—zig'zag", adv. In a zigzag manner.—zig'zag"-ger-y, n. [Rare.] The quality of being zigzag.—zig'-zag"ger-y, a.

zig'zag", n. 1. A series of short sharp turns or angles from one side to the other in succession, or something characterized by such angles, as a line, a path, a pattern, or a movement. (1) Arch. A chevron-molding, dancette, or the like. (2) Fort. Same as BOYAU. (3) In fisheries, a form of salmon-leap or fishway. 2. [Eng.] A bombycid moth (Bombyx dispar). [F., < G. zickzack, redup. of zacke, sharp point.]

zij, zij, n. [Old Per.] The Persian astronomical tables, revised and corrected by Omar Khayyam.

zikr, zikr, n. [Ar.] A religious service of the dervishes, beginning with a recitation and followed by a dance, to induce a state of ecstasy or trance.

zil'la, zil'ə, n. [Egypt.] A smooth shrubby herb (Zilla myagroides) of the mustard family, in northern Africa, with stiff spinescent branches. Its leaves are boiled and eaten like cabbage by the Arabs.

zil'lah, zil'ä, n. [Hind.] A provincial governmental district in India.

zimb, zimb, n. [Ar.] An unidentified Abyssinian fly resembling the tsetse, destructive to cattle.

zim'bi, zim bi, n. [E. Ind.] A cowry.

zim'ent-wa"ter, zim'ent-wô"ter, n. Water impregnated with copper: found in copper-mines. [W.] [Representing G. cement-wasser, "cement-water."] zim'my, zim'i, n. [ZIM'MIES, pl.] One of any people subjected by the Moslems in the 7th century and taken under protection on payment of a tribute, especially a poll-tax.

Holding their ancestral faith, the people became Zimmies, or protected dependents.
W. MUIR The Caliphate ch. 10, p. 83. [S. K. & CO. '83.]

zi-moc'ca, zi-mec'ä, n. A very soft, massive, cup-shaped bath-sponge (Spongia zimocca) of the Mediterranean.

zi'mome, n. Same as ZYMOME.

zinc, zinc, vt. To coat or cover with zinc.

zinc, n. A bluish-white metallic element occurring in combination and reported native in small quantities. See ELEMENT. Zinc is extensively used in the arts, as in the manufacture of brass, and for roofing and the like, also as the positive element in batteries. (See ZINCOUS, 2.) Its salts have varied applications, as the oxid in painting and the chlorid and sulfate in medicine. [F., < G. zink, zinc.]

Owing to its slight alteration in the air zinc meets with extensive application as sheet-zinc for coating statues and in architectural adornment, and in galvanizing sheet iron. VON RICHTER Text-Book Inorg. Chem. tr. by Smith, pt. ii, p. 311. [P. B. & CO. '83.]

—butter of zinc, zinc chlorid. See BUTTER¹, 2.— oxid of z., see ZINC OXID.— perforated z. (Bee-keeping), a sheet of zinc having oblong holes large enough to admit a worker, but not a queen or drone. queen'-excluder‡.— z. amin, a white amorphous compound, Zn $(NH_2)_2$, formed by treating zinc ethyl with ammonia. z. amid‡.— z. amyl, a colorless transparent mobile liquid compound, $Zn(C_5H_{11})_2$, made by heating zinc with mercuric amylate. On contact with air it fumes, but does not take fire. z. amylid‡.— zinc'-blende", n. Same as SPHALERITE.— z.-bloom, n. Mineral. Same as HYDROZINCITE. —z.-colic, n. A colic caused by the slow poison of zinc oxid, analogous to lead-colic.— z. ethyl, a mobile volatile liquid compound, $Zn(C_2H_5)_2$, having a disagreeable odor, formed when ethyl iodid is heated with zinc in a sealed tube. It takes fire instantly on coming in contact with the air, diffusing white fumes of zinc oxid. z. ethid‡.— z. methyl, a mobile, spontaneously inflammable, liquid compound, $Zn(CH_3)_2$, similar to zinc ethyl in its preparation and properties. z. methid‡. —z. oxid, a white pulverulent oxid (ZnO) made by burning zinc in air. It is used as a pigment, chiefly as a substitute for white lead. flowers of z.‡; nihil album‡; philosopher's wool‡; z.-bloom‡; z. white‡.— z. sender, an automatic telegraph device for increasing the speed of signaling through cables. It consists of a polarized relay so connected with the signaling-key, the cable, and an auxiliary battery as to send into the cable after each positive or signaling impulse a momentary reverse or zinc current to clear the conductor. Compare CURB-SENDER.— z. spar (Mineral.), same as CALAMINE.— z.-spinel, n. Mineral. Same as GAHNITE.— z. vitriol, zinc sulfate. See VITRIOL. — z. white, zinc oxid used as a pigment.

Derivatives: — zinc'anet, n. Zinc chlorid.— zinc'ic, a. Of, pertaining to, or derived from zinc; as, zincic chlorid: now seldom used.— zinc'id, n. A binary compound of zinc: no longer used. zinc'ide‡. —zinc-if'er-ous, zinc"i-fi-ca'tion, etc. Same as ZINKIFEROUS, etc.— zinc'ite, n. Mineral. A sub-adamantine, deep-red, translucent to subtranslucent zinc oxid (ZnO), crystallizing in the hexagonal system; zinc ore. zink'ite‡.— zinck'ic, zinck-if'er-ous, etc. Same as ZINCIC, ZINKIFEROUS, etc.— zinck'y, a. Same as ZINCIC.

Zin'ca-li, zin'cä-li, n. A name given by the Gipsies to themselves: translated 'black men.' See ZINGARO.

zinc'ing, zinc'ing, n. The act or process of heating iron plate with zinc or zinc salts; galvanization. See GALVANIZED IRON, under GALVANIZE.

zinco-, zinc-. Derived from ZINC: combining forms. — zin'co, ri. [Eng.] To produce a plate for printing by the zincographic process.— zin'co, n. A zincograph.— zinc'ode, n. Elec. The electrode corresponding to the zinc of a cell; the negative pole of a battery; the positive electrode in electrolysis.— zinc'oid, a. Resembling zinc, especially its electrical properties.— zinc-ol'y-sis, n. A chemical decomposition produced by electrolysis in which the action is referred to the zinc element.— zinc'o-lyte, n. A body or compound that is decomposed by zincolysis.— zin'co-po"lar†, a. Of or pertaining to the zincode.— zin'co-type, n. A zincograph.

zinc'o-type‡.— zinc-og'ra-pher, n. An etcher on zinc.— zinc"o-graph'ic, a. Of or pertaining to zincography. zinc"o-graph'ic-al‡.

zinc-og'ra-phy, zinc-eg'rä-fi, n. A process of producing relief printing-plates by making in ink a design on a zinc plate and biting away with an acid those parts of the plate not protected by the ink. [< ZINCO- + -GRAPHY.]

zinc'ous, zinc'us, a. 1. Chem. Of, pertaining to, or derived from zinc; zincic. 2. Physics. Of or pertaining to the zinc or electropositive element of a battery, or to the negative terminal connected with it.— zincous element, the basic element in a chemical compound.

zincz, zincz, n. [Lith.] The perpetual fire formerly maintained by the Lithuanians as a religious rite in connection with the worship of great oaks.

Zind'i-kite, zind'i-kuit, n. One of a Mohammedan sect so named. See quotation. [Of Ar. origin.]

There is a sect among the Mohammedans, called the Zindikites, who believe neither in the providence of the Sovereign Power, nor in the immortality of the soul. But the four elements they believe to be the four essences constituting the Deity.
CHARLES BUCKE Beauties of Nature, Futurity p. 319. [H. 43.]

Zin'ga-ro, zin'gä-rō, n. [-RI, -rī, pl.] [It.] A Gipsy. Zin'ga-no‡.— Zin'ga-ra, n. fem. [-RE, pl.]

Their Scotch name Tinkler . . . is commonly held to be a mere variant of tinker; but if its initial t correspond to z, . . . it comes very near the Italian Zingaro or Zingano, which, like the German Zigeuner, Czech Cingan or Cigán, and Magyar Cigány, is a form of the most widespread of all the Gipsies' appellations.
F. H. GROOME in Encyc. Brit. 9th ed., vol. x, p. 612.

zing'el, zing'el, n. [G.] A percoid fish (Aspro or Cingla), as Aspro zingel of the Danube, etc.

Zin'gi-an, zin'ji-an. 1. a. Pertaining to the Bantu or South-African family of languages. See BANTU: SOUTH-AFRICAN. II. n. The dialect or dialects of the Bantu language-group.

Zin'gi-ber, zin'ji-ber, n. Bot. A genus of Eastern plants of the ginger family, from the aromatic roots of several species of which comes the ginger of commerce. [L., < Gr. zingiberis, ginger.] Zin'zi-ber‡.

Zin"gi-ber-a'ce-æ, zin"ji-ber-ê'si-ī or -gi-ber-g'ce-ê, n. pl. Bot. An order of monocotyledonous plants — the ginger family — distinguished from the closely allied banana family (Musaceæ) by having a single stamen. They are all tropical plants having aromatic and usually creeping rootstocks, large simple leaves, and a dense spike of often handsome flowers. The order embraces 36 genera and 475 species. Zin"zi-ber-a'ce-æ‡.
— zin"gi-ber-a'ceous, a.

A stream overgrown with zingiberaceous plants.
A. R. WALLACE Malay Archipelago ch. 3, p. 44. [H. '69.]

Zin'gri-an, zin'gri-an, n. Same as BANTU.

zink†, n. Same as ZINC. zinglı†.

zin'ke, tsin'ke, n. [G.] A large musical wind-instrument, the precursor of the cornet, formerly common in Europe, consisting properly of a leather-covered wooden horn with seven finger-holes.

zink'en-ite, zink'en-ait, n. Mineral. A metallic, steel-gray lead sulfantimonite ($PbSb_2S_4$), crystallizing in the orthorhombic system. [< Herr Zincken, director of the Anhalt mines.]

zink-if'er-ous, zink-if'ger-us, a. Producing or containing zinc. [< ZINC + L. fero, bear.]

zink'i-fy, zink'i-fai, vt. To apply zinc to, as by coating or impregnating. [< ZINC + -FY.]
— zink"i-fi-ca'tion, n.

zink'ite, n. Same as ZINCITE.

zink'o-site, zink'o-sait, n. A zinc sulfate ($ZnSO_4$).

zink'y, zink'i, a. Of, pertaining to, or containing zinc; zincic. zinck'y‡.

A Zinnia (Zinnia elegans).

Zinn'i-a, zin'i-ä, n. Bot. 1. A genus of American, chiefly Mexican, herbs of the aster family, having opposite entire leaves, single terminal heads, and showy flowers with the bright-colored rays long-enduring. Several are in ornamental cultivation. 2. [z-] A plant of this genus. [< J. G. Zinn, German botanist (1727–'59).]

zinn'wald-ite, tsin'wäld-[or -väld-] ait, n. Mineral. A micaceous, pearly, violet-brown or gray mica ($H_2K_4Li_4Fe_5Al_8F_8Si_{14}O_{42}$), crystallizing in the monoclinic system. See MICA. [< Zinnwald, in Bohemia.]

zin'sang, zin'sang, n. Same as LINSANG.

Zin'zi-ber, Zin"zi-ber-a'ce-æ, zin"zi-ber-a'ceous. Same as ZINGIBER, etc.

Zi'on, zai'ən, n. 1. A hill in Jerusalem, which after the capture of that city from the Jebusites became the royal residence of David and his successors; hence, the ancient Hebrew theocracy, or the modern church of Christ. 2. The heavenly Jerusalem; heaven.

The strong battlements of Zion are round about us.
R. D. HITCHCOCK Eternal Atonement ser. xiv, p. 229. [S. '88.]

[< Gr. Siōn, < Heb. Tsiyōn, hill.]

— Zi'on-ward, adv. Toward Zion, especially in the figurative sense; Godward; heavenward.

zip, zip, n. A sound as of a bullet passing through the air: often used as an exclamation. [Imitative.]

Ziph-i'i-dæ, zif-ai'i-dī or -i'i-dē, n. pl. Mam. A family of delphinoidean cetaceans with a dolphin-like form and generally only a pair of teeth in the lower jaw, as the bottlenoses. Ziph'i-us, n. (t. g.) [< Gr. xiphias, sword-fish, < xiphos, straight sword.] — ziph-i'id, n.— ziph'i-i-form", a. Having the form of a ziphiid. — ziph'i-oid, a. Of or pertaining to the Ziphiidæ.

Ziph"i-i'næ, zif"i-ai'nī or -i'nē, n. pl. Mam. The Ziphiidæ as a subfamily of Physeteridæ. [< ZIPHIUS.]

ziph"i-ster'num, zif"i-ster'num, n. See XIPHISTERNUM.

zip'pe-ite, zip'e-ait, n. Mineral. A yellow, acicular, hydrous uranium sulfate. [< F. X. M. Zippe, German mineralogist.]

zir'a-leet, zir'ä-lit, n. A song, especially of triumph.

Hang out your gilded tapestry in the streets,
And light your shrines, and chaunt your ziraleets.
MOORE Lalla Rookh, Veiled Prophet pt. iii, st. 9.

zirco-. Derived from ZIRCONIUM: a combining form: in chemistry indicating the presence of zirconium in a compound or series of compounds; as, a *zirco*fluorid (more properly a fluozirconate).

zir'con, zer'cen, n. Mineral. An adamantine, variously colored, transparent to opaque zirconium silicate ($ZrSiO_4$), crystallizing in the tetragonal system. Certain varieties of zircon are cut into gems, and as such exhibit more fire than any other known gem except the diamond. The gem varieties of zircon are called jargon and hyacinth.

Zircon . . . occurs in crystalline rocks, especially granular limestone, chloritic and other schists. J. D. DANA Mineralogy ed. by E. S. Dana, § 394, p. 485. [W. & S. '92.]

[F., = jargon; see JARGON².]

— zircon syenite (Petrol.), a variety of eleolite syenite locally rich in zircon, occurring in southern Norway.

— zir'con-ate, n. A salt of zirconic acid.— zir"con-if'er-ous, a. Petrol. Containing zircon.— zir'con-oid, n. Crystal. A double, eight-faced, tetragonal pyramid included under sixteen scalene triangular faces.

zir-co'ni-a, zer-cō'ni-ä, n. Chem. A white pulverulent zirconium oxid (ZrO_2) obtained by heating the metal to redness in contact with air. Zirconia acts both as a base and as an acid. When strongly heated it becomes luminous, and it is hence used in certain forms of incandescent burners. [< ZIRCON.] zir'co-na‡.
— zir-co'ni-a-light", n. A brilliant artificial light in which zircon is employed, as in the calcium-light.

zir-con'ic, zer-cen'ic, a. Chem. Of, pertaining to, or derived from zirconium. zir-co'ni-an‡.
— zirconic acid, a hypothetical compound (H_2ZrO_3) known by its salts, as sodium zirconate (Na_2ZrO_3) and calcium zirconate ($CaZrO_3$).

zir-co'ni-um, zer-cō'ni-um, n. Chem. An earthy metallic element that is prepared as a black amorphous powder, as steel-gray shining scales resembling graphite, or as crystalline laminæ, resembling antimony. See ELEMENT. Zirconium has of itself no practical application, but its salts find limited use, and are derived chiefly from zircon. [< ZIRCON.]

zircono-. Chem. Same as ZIRCO-.

zith'er, } zith'ger, zith'ern, n. A simple form of stringed zith'ern, } instrument, having a flat sounding-board, and strings that in use are stopped with the fingers of the left hand and plucked with those of the right; the modern form of cithern.

A Zither.

And as we float along through this enchanting land, the men, thrumming the guitar, the mandolin, and the zither, play for us the Mexican national anthem.
C. D. WARNER On Horseback, Mexican Notes ch. 1, p. 182. [H. M. & CO. '88.]

There is a peculiar spirit in the zitter, and it is wonderfully adapted for Alpine melodies; for those tender, simple, peasant airs, through which ever runs such a plaintive sentiment. ANNA M. HOWITT Art-Student in Munich ch. 5, p. 70. [T. & F. '54.]

Zi-za'ni-a, zai-zē'ni-ä or zī-zg'ni-ä, n. Bot. A small genus of tall aquatic grasses, including the wild, water, or Indian rice. See illus. under RICE. [< LL. zizania, < Gr. zizanion, darnel.]

ziz'a-ny†, n. Darnel.

ziz'el, ziz'el, n. Same as SOUSLIK.

zi-zith', zī-zith', n. [Heb.] The fringe or tassel formerly worn by Jews on the outer garment (Matt. xxiii, 5), but now worn on the tallith or woolen scarf during prayer. See illus. under TALLITH. Compare PHYLACTERY. si-sith'‡.

She could only dare to touch the zizith, or tassel, that hung on the corner of his outer garment, as on those of all other Jews.
GEIKIE Life of Christ vol. ii, ch. 42, p. 169. [K. & CO. '77.]

Ziz'y-phus, ziz'i-fus, n. Bot. A large, widely distributed genus of spiny shrubs or trees of the buckthorn family, the best-known species being the jujube. See illus. under JUJUBE. [< L. zizyphus, < Gr. zizyphos, jujube-tree.]

zo-. Same as ZOO-.

zo'a, zō'ä, n. Plural of ZOON.

zo-ad'ule†, n. Bot. A zoospore or swarm-spore. zo-ad'u-la†.

zo-æ'a, zo-æ'al. Same as ZOEA, ZOEAL.

zo-æ'ci-um, n. Same as ZOŒCIUM.

zo-am'y-lin, zo-am'i-lin, n. Chem. Same as PARAMYLUM. [< Gr. zōē (see ZOETIC) + AMYLIN.] zo"o-am'y-lin‡.

Zo"an-tha'ce-a, zō"an-thē'sg-ä or -thg'ce-ä, n. pl. Zooph. A suborder of actiniarian zoantharians with polyps aggregated and coriaceous. [< ZOANTHUS.]
— zo"an-tha'ce-an, a. & n.

Zo"an-tha'ri-a, zō"an-thē'ri-ä or -thg'ri-ä, n. pl. Zooph. An order of anthozoans with 6 simple tentacles or a multiple of 6 (or of 4), including sea-anemones and most corals. [< ZO- + Gr. anthos, flower.]
— zo"an-tha'ri-an, a. & n.

Zo-an'thi-dæ, zo-an'thi-dī or -dē, n. pl. Zooph. A family of zoanthaceans, especially those with a cylindrical or clavate column, bract-like marginal lobules, and conic tentacles. [< ZOANTHUS.]— zo-an'thid, n.

zo-an'tho-deme, zo-an'tho-dīm, n. Zooph. The zooids of a compound anthozoan, collectively. [< ZO- + Gr. anthos, flower, + dema, bundle, < deō, bind.]
— zo-an"tho-dem'ic, a.

zo-an'thoid, zo-an'theid. 1. a. Of or pertaining to the Zoanthidæ. II. n. One of the Zoanthidæ. [< ZOANTHUS + -OID.]

zo"an-thro'pi-a, zō"an-thrō'pi-ä, n. A form of monomania in which the patient fancies himself one of the lower animals. Compare LYCANTHROPY.

These changes of personality, and the changing of hypnotic subjects into animals, remind us forcibly of the stories of changing men into animals (zoanthropia). . . . occasionally epidemic in the Middle Ages and later. MOLL Hypnotism ch. 3, p. 136. [W. S. '90.]

[< ZO- + Gr. anthrōpos, man.] zo-an'thro-py‡.

Zo-an'thus, zo-an'thus, n. Zooph. 1. A genus typical of Zoanthidæ. 2. [z-] A sea-anemone of this or a related genus. The polyps are adherent, being united by a creeping cœnosarc, and there are generally adventitious particles of sand or stone in the ectoderm. [< ZO- + Gr. anthos, flower.]

Zo-ar'ci-dæ, } zō-ār'si-dī or -ci-dē, -cai-dē, n. pl.
Zo-ar'cei-dæ, } Ich. A family of acanthopterygian fishes with eel-like body, rudimentary jugular or no ventrals, long dorsal and anal fins confluent with caudal, and cranium sloping backwards; Lycodidæ. Zo-ar'ces, n. (t. g.) [< Gr. zōarkēs, life-protecting, < zōē (see ZOETIC) + arkeō, protect.]
— zo-ar'cid, n.— zo-ar'coid, a. & n.

zo-a'ri-um, zō-ê'ri-um or -g'ri-um, n. [-RI-A, pl.] A polyzoan colony; polyzoary. [< Gr. zōarion, dim. of zōon; see ZOO-.] — zo-a'ri-al, a.

zo'bo, zō'bō, n. One of a breed of humped cattle, reared in Asia for its flesh and milk and as a beast of burden: supposed to be a hybrid between the yak and the zebu. [< Tibetan mdzopo, < mdzo, zobo.]

zoc'co-lo, n. [It.] Same as SOCLE. zoc'co‡.

zo'cle, zō'cl (XIII), n. Arch. Same as SOCLE.

zo'di-ac, zō'di-ac, n. 1. Astron. An imaginary belt encircling the heavens and extending about 8° on each side of the ecliptic, within which are the larger planets. It is divided into twelve parts, called signs of the zodiac, which 2,000 years ago corresponded to 12 constellations bearing the same names. Now, owing to the precession of the equinoxes, each constellation is in the sign that has the name next following that of the constellation. See SIGN. 2. Figuratively, a complete circuit; round. 3. [Rare.] A circle; halo.

POPE Temple of Fame l. 234.

4. Her. A bearing representing a part of the zodiac. [< F. zodiaque, < L. zodiacus, < Gr. zōdiakos, of animals, < zōdion, dim. of zōon; see ZOO-.]
— lunar zodiac, a circle of 27 or 28 groups of stars: anciently, in Oriental countries, to mark the moon's progress around the heavens.— z. ring, a ring decorated with a sign of the zodiac, and worn with an astrological reference.

zo-di'a-cal, zo-dai'a-cal, a. Of or pertaining to the zodiac; situated in the zodiac; as, zodiacal stars.

—zodiacal light (Astron.), a disk of faint light surrounding the sun, lying near the plane of the ecliptic and extending slightly beyond the orbit of the earth. It may be seen as a triangular pillar of light rising from the western horizon after the end of evening twilight in the winter and spring, or in the east before daybreak from September till January. Within the tropics it sometimes rivals the Milky Way. It is now generally believed to be sunlight reflected from a cloud of meteoroids revolving about the sun.

zo″di-oph'i-lous, zō″di-ef'i-lus, a. Bot. Animal-loving: said of flowers adapted for pollination by animals. Such flowers may be ornithophilous, entomophilous, protozophilous, etc. See these words. [< Gr. zōdion (see ZODIAC) + phileō, love.]

zo-e'a, } zo-i'a, C. (zō'i-a, W.), n. Crust. A larval zo-œ'a, } stage of a decapod, as a crab, preceding the megalopa, having a short carapace often with long spines, conspicuous stalked eyes, and rudimentary thoracic and abdominal limbs, the appendages of the head being locomotory. [< Gr. zōon; see ZOO-.]

Zoea of a Crab, after the first molt.

—zo-e'al, a. Of, pertaining to, or of the nature of a zoea. zo-œ'al;.—zo'e-form, a. Having the form of a zoea. zo'œ-form;.

zo″e-prax'i-scope, zō″e-prax'i-scōp, n. Same as ZOOPRAXISCOPE.

zo-e'ther, zō-i'ther, n. A primitive substance assumed by some to account for animal magnetism and similar phenomena. [< Gr. zōē (see ZOETIC) + ETHER.]

—zo″e-ther'ic, a. Relating to zoether.

zo-et'ic, zo-et'ic, a. Pertaining to or of the nature of life. [C.] [< Gr. zōē, life, < zaō, live.]

zo'e-trope, zō'e-trōp, n. Physics. A philosophical toy on the principle of the phenakistoscope, but employing, instead of a disk and a mirror, a revolving cylinder having a succession of slits around its edge and a succession of pictures on its inner surface. The eye views the pictures through the opposite slits. Called also wheel of life. See PHENAKISTOSCOPE. [< Gr. zōē (see ZOETIC) + tropos, turning, < trepō, turn.] zo'o-trope;.

Zo'har, zō'hār, n. 1. Splendor: an important part of the cabala. See HOD, under SEPHIRA. 2. A Hebrew cabalistic book, probably a compilation of the 13th century, but traditionally ascribed to Rabbi Simon ben Yochi (1st century).

The renowned Zohar is written in Aramaic, and is a commentary on the Pentateuch, according to its division into fifty-two hebdomadal lessons.

C. D. GINSBURG in Encyc. Brit. 9th ed., vol. xiii, p. 813.

[< Heb zōhar, candor.] So'har;.

Zo'har-ite, zō'hār-oit, n. A member of a sect of Jews founded by Jacob Frank in Podolia (died 1791 or so called because they took the cabalistic work Zohar as their Bible. Encyc. Brit. 9th ed., vol. xiii, p. 681.

zo″i-a'tri-a, zō″i-ē'tri-a or at'ri-a, n. Veterinary art or surgery. [< zo- + Gr. iatreia, healing, < iatros, physician, < iaomai, heal.] zo″i-at'ri-ca;.

zo'ic, zō'ic, a. 1. Pertaining to, connected with, or characterized by animals or animal life. 2. Specifically, in geology, containing fossils, or yielding evidence of contemporaneous plant or animal life: said of rocks.

These great Pre-Cambrian and Post-Archæan series are zoic in character. R. D. IRVING in Rep. U. S. Geol. Survey, '83–'84 p. 483. (GOV. PTG. OFF. '88.)

zo'id, zō'id or -oid, n. Biol. The higher aggregate formed by gemmation of merides. [< Gr. zōē; see ZOETIC.]

Zo-il'e-an, zo-il'ē-an, a. Resembling or pertaining to Zoilus, a Greek critic of the time of Ptolemy Philadelphus. Compare HOMEROMASTIX.

—Zo'il-ism, n. Carping detraction; criticism like that of Zoilus.—Zo'il-ist, n.

zois'ite, zois'oit, n. Mineral. A vitreous, white, green, or red, transparent to subtranslucent hydrogen-calcium-aluminium silicate ($HCa_2Al_3Si_3O_{13}$), crystallizing in the orthorhombic system. [< Baron von Zois, its discoverer.]

zo'ism, zō'izm, n. The doctrine that life originates from a specific principle, and is not a mere resultant of combined forces. [< Gr. zōē; see ZOETIC.]

—zo'ist, n.—zo-is'tic, a. 1. Of or pertaining to zoism. 2. Of or pertaining to life; vital.

zo'kor, zō'kōr, n. A mole-like muroid rodent (Siphneus aspalax) of the Altai Mountains.

Zo'la-ism, zō'la-izm, n. The literary principles and practises of the French novelist Emile Zola (born 1840); naturalism: usually in a derogatory sense, implying coarse realism and gross detail.

Set the maiden fancies wallowing in the troughs of Zolaism.

TENNYSON Locksley Hall Sixty Years After st. 73.

Zo'la-ist, zō'la-ist, n. A follower of Zola; one of the school of coarse realism in literature.

But of the orthodox Zolaists, who is there of whom any sane criticism can say, having read him, anything that is good?

SAINTSBURY Essays on French Novelists essay i, p. 25. [8. '91.]

Zoll'ner's lines. Rows of parallel lines caused to appear non-parallel by the optical effect of intersecting oblique lines.

zoll'ver-ein″, tsōl'fer-ain', n. [G.] 1. A former trade-league or customs-union constituted by 26 of the states (including at last Alsace-Lorraine) of what is now the German empire. The German zollverein was instituted by certain states in 1819, and from time to time received accessions, until in 1865 all the German states were included in it except Austria, the two Mecklenburgs, and the Hanse towns. This commercial union paved the way to political consolidation and the establishment of the present empire, under which the original zollverein has been superseded by the imperial customs.

2. Hence, a union of separate political communities or states for adjusting a common tariff of duties on foreign imports and regulating trade especially by establishing internal free trade between themselves.

zom'bi, zom'bi, n. [Southern U. S.] A fantom, or a ghost: often invoked in nurseries, and at meetings of colored persons to frighten the superstitious.

zo'na, zō'na, n. 1. Anat. A belt or zone. 2. Pathol. A form of erysipelas; shingles. [L., < Gr. zōnē, < zōnnymi, girdle.]—zona pellucida or radiata, the cell-wall of the ovum, which appears either clear or marked with numerous radiating canals.

zo'nal, zō'nal, a. 1. Pertaining to, of the nature of, or marked by a zone or zones.

It is true that, if we compare extremes, viz., polar with tropical regions, we find a conspicuous contrast determined by temperature, . . . yet we cannot make a zonal arrangement of families as easily as we can with plants.

LE CONTE Compend of Geol. pt. i, ch. 3, p. 112. [A. '84.]

2. Bot. Relating to or exhibiting the zone: said of that view of a diatom which shows the line of contact of the two valves. See FRUSTULE. Compare VALVAL, and SIDE VIEW and GIRDLE VIEW, under SIDE and GIRDLE. 3. Crystal. Exhibiting zones; as, zonal structure. 4. Of or pertaining to the body-segments of an articulate; metameric; as, zonal symmetry. [< LL. zonalis, < L. zona; see ZONA.]

—zonal equation (Crystal.), an equation expressing the common position of all the planes of a zone with reference to the axes.—z. structure (Crystal.), a crystalline structure in which the characteristic bands, markings, etc., are concentric, usually following the outline of the crystal.

zo'nal-ly, zō'nal-i, adv. After the manner of a zone; so as to form or exhibit a zone or zones.

zo'nar, zō'nār, n. A girdle that native Jews and Christians were once required to wear in some Moslem countries as a distinctive mark. [< Modern Gr. zōnari, < Gr. zōnarion, dim. of zōnē; see ZONA.] zon'nar†.

Zo-na'ri-a[1], zo-nē'ri-a or -nā'ri-a, n. Bot. A genus of phæosporous seaweeds having fan-shaped zonate fronds. [L., fem. of zonarius; see ZONARY.]

—zo″na-ri'id, n.—zo-na'ri-oid, a.

Zo-na'ri-a[2], n. pl. Mam. The Zonoplacentalia. [< L. zonarius; see ZONARY.]

zo'na-ry, zō'na-ri, a. Resembling a belt or girdle; specifically, having the villi collected in a band encircling the chorion, as the deciduate placenta of carnivores, elephants, etc. [< L. zonarius, < zona; see ZONA.]

zo'nate, zō'net or -nēt, a. Bot. & Zool. Marked with zones or concentric colored bands; disposed in the form of a zone or zones. [< L. zona; see ZONA.]

zon'da, zon'da, n. A dry hot west wind occurring especially in July and August, that blows from the Andes in the neighborhood of San Juan, in the Argentine Republic, and bears clouds of dust; also, a similar wind from the north on the Argentine plains near Mendoza. [< Zonda, village in the Argentine Republic.]

zone, zōn, v. [Rare.] 1. t. To encircle, as if with a zone or belt; engirdle. 11. i. To take the form of zones.

zone, n. 1. Geog. A region of the earth enclosed between two parallels of latitude; specifically, one of the five divisions of the earth's surface, taking their names from the prevailing climate, and distinguished as follows: the torrid zone, extending on each side of the equator 23° 27′ (the inclination of the ecliptic), so that the sun is in the zenith at noon in one part of it or another throughout the whole year; the temperate zones, included between the parallels of 23° 27′ and 66° 33′ on both sides of the equator, so that the sun is always south of the zenith at noon in the north temperate zone and north of it in the south temperate, but rises and sets daily in each throughout the year; and the frigid zones, within the parallels of 66° 33′ and the poles, so that there is at least one day in the year in each when the sun does not rise and one when it does not set.

Terrestrial Zones.

To claim the Arctic came the Sun,
With banners from the burning zone.

B. F. TAYLOR Northern Lights l. 2.

2. A belt or area delimited from others, as by the character of its organisms; also, a belt of land distinguished by any characteristic; as, the wheat-zone; the free-trade zone in Africa.

A bed, or limited number of beds, characterized by one or more distinctive fossils, is termed a zone or horizon, and . . . is often known by the name of a typical fossil, as the different zones in the Lias are by their special species of ammonite.

ARCH. GEIKIE Text-Book Geology bk. vi, p. 635. [MACM. '82.]

On the volcano of Teneriffe there are five successive zones, each producing a distinct race of plants. MARY SOMERVILLE Connection of Physical Sciences § 27, p. 265. [H. '46.]

Some naturalists have divided the sea into five zones bounded by horizontal planes: (1) the littoral zone (between tide-marks), (2) the laminarian zone (low water to fifteen fathoms), (3) the coralline zone (fifteen to fifty fathoms), (4) the deep-sea coral zone (fifty to a hundred fathoms), (5) the abyssal zone (beyond a hundred fathoms). These distinctions are not fully established.

3. Math. The portion of a surface of revolution, included between two parallel planes that are perpendicular to the axis. 4. Astron. A belt on the surface of the celestial sphere, parallel to the equator. 5. Crystal. A series of planes whose common intersections are parallel. 6. Anat. A belt-like area distinguished from its surroundings either by structure or appearance; as, the zone of Zinn, about the hyaloid membrane of the eye. 7. Any belt, band, stripe, or line, as of color or of other distinguishing thing or character, encircling an object or concentrically disposed on a surface. 8. Originally (now chiefly in poetry), a belt or girdle.

Earth proudly wears the Parthenon,
As the best gem upon her zone.

EMERSON The Problem st. 3.

9. [Rare.] Distance around a globular or circular body. [F., < Sp. zona, < L. zona, < Gr. zōnē; see ZONA.]

—annual zone, an annual ring. See RING, n.—peripolar z., the region surrounding the polar zone on the body of a patient under electrotherapeutic treatment: a term proposed by De Watteville.—polar z., the region surrounding the therapeutic electrode applied to the human body for electric treatment: a term proposed by De Watteville.—primordial z., the lowest geological formation known, during the currency of the epithet, to contain a fossil fauna: equivalent to the Cambrian. See GEOLOGY.—rainless z., the region of the ocean just above the tropics that has the least precipitation and maximum saltiness.—shear-zone″, n. Geol. A zone of rock dynamically metamorphosed along a fault or shear-plane.—three-mile z., the belt within the three-mile limit. See LIMIT.—zone'-ax″is, n. Crystal. The line of intersection of all the planes of a zone (supposed to pass through one point).—z. of clouds, a rather permanent belt of clouds situated above the thermal equator of the earth.—z. of defense, the space around a fortification within reach of its guns.—z. of stars, the stars contained within a zone of the celestial sphere. See ZONE, 4.—z. of vegetation, a belt of vegetation of a given type lying between certain altitudes; as, the pine zone of vegetation.

zoned, zōnd, a. 1. Wearing a zone or girdle; girt.

Caught back to press again
On bosoms zoned with pain.

E. B. BROWNING The Scraphim l. 508.

2. Marked with zones, as of color, form, or material; specifically, in biology, zonate.

One of the party picked up a well characterised piece of zoned agate. SCHOOLCRAFT Expedition Through Upper Miss. to Itasca Lake ch. 5, p. 51. [H. '34.]

zone'less, zōn'les, a. Having no belt or girdle.

zo'nict, n. A zone; belt.

zo-nif'er-ous, zo-nif'ėr-us, a. Having or bearing a zone. [< ZONE + L. fero, bear.]

Zo-nit'i-dæ, zo-nit'i-dī or -dē, n. pl. Conch. The Vitrinidæ. Zo-ni'tes, n. (t. g.) [< Gr. zōnitēs, girdled, < zōnē; see ZONA.]

—zo-nit'id, a. & n.—zo-nit'oid, a.

zo″no-cil'i-ate, zō″no-sil'i-et or -ēt, a. Zool. Having a ring or belt of cilia. [< ZONA + CILIATE.]

zo'noid, zō'noid, a. [Rare.] Pertaining to or like a zone; zonular. [< Gr. zōnoeidēs, < zōnē (see ZONA); see -OID.]

Zo″no-plac″en-ta'li-a, zo′no-plas″en-tē'li-a or -plą″cen-tą'li-a, n. pl. Mam. A section of deciduate placental mammals with a zonary placenta, including carnivores, proboscideans, and hyracoids. [< ZONA + PLACENTALIA.]

—zo″no-pla-cen'tal, a.

zo″no-skel'et-on, zō″no-skel'et-un, n. Anat. The framework by which the limbs are attached to the trunk; the shoulder and pelvic girdles. [< ZONA + SKELETON.]

zo'nu-la, zō'niu-la, n. Anat. A little stripe or band. [L., dim. of zona; see ZONA.]

zo'nu-lar, zō'niu-lar, a. Pertaining to or of the nature or shape of a zonula.—zonular cataract, a cataract that forms between the cortex and the nucleus of the ocular lens: occurring mostly in young children.—z. placenta, a diffuse form of placenta.

zo'nule, zō'niūl, n. A small zone, belt, or ring; specifically, a zonula. [< L. zonula; see ZONULA.]

zo'nu-let, zō'niu-let, n. [Rare.] A small zone or girdle.

zo'nure, zō'niur, n. A zonuroid lizard. [< ZONA + Gr. oura, tail.]

Zo-nu'ri-dæ, zo-niū'ri-dī or -nū'ri-dē, n. pl. Herp. An African family of lizards, especially Agamoidea with supratemporal fosse roofed over and tongue simple.

Zo-nu'rus, n. (t. g.) [< ZONA + Gr. oura, tail.]

zoo, zō, n. 1. [Z-] The Zoological Gardens in London: originally a humorous abbreviation. 2. Any zoological garden. [Abbr. of ZOOLOGICAL.]

zoo-, zo-. Derived from Greek zōon, animal (< zaō, live); combining forms.—zo″o-am'yl-in, n. Same as GLYCOGEN.—zo″o-bi'o-tism, n. Same as BIOTICS.—zo'o-blast, n. An animal cell.—zo'o-carp, n. Same as ZOOSPORE.—zo″o-cau'lon, n. The branching support of an infusorian colony, as in the genus Dendrosoma, bearing tentacles at the ends of the branches.—zo'o-chem'is-try, n. Animal chemistry; specifically, the chemistry of the solids and fluids contained in the animal economy.—zo'o-chem-y-;.—zo″o-chem'ic-al, a.—zo″o-chlo-rel'la, n. One of the green pigmentary particles of various invertebrates, as hydras.—zo'o-cyst, n. A cyst formed by a protozoan or protophyte before sporulation.—zo″o-cys'tic, a.—zo″o-cyt'i-um, n. The gelatinous support of an infusorian colony.—zo″o-cyt'i-al, a.—zo″o-den'dri-um, n. The branched support of an infusorian colony.—zo″o-den'dri-al, a.—zo″o-dy-nam'ic, a. Of or pertaining to zoodynamics.—zo″o-dy-nam'ics, n. The science that treats of the vital powers of animals; animal physiology.—zo″o-eryth'rin, n. 1. A red animal pigment contained in the plumage of certain turacous. 2. A red lipochrome pigment supposed to have a respiratory function in sponges.—zo″o-ful'vin, n. A yellow animal pigment contained in the plumage of turacous.—zo'o-ga-mete, n. Bot. A motile coalescing cell or gamete; planogamete.—zo″o-go-nid'i-um, n. [-IA, pl.] Bot. A motile gonidium; a gonidium possessing the power of locomotion.—zo'o-graft, n. A piece of the tissue of a living animal cut off and applied to supply a human body with a wanting part. zooplastic graft;.—zo″o-mag'net-ism, n Animal magnetism.—zo″o-mag-net'ic, a.—zo'o-man″cy, n. Divination by observation of animals and their behavior under particular circumstances. Compare NECROMANCY, GEOMANCY, etc.—zo″o-man'tic, a.—zo″o-me-chan'ics, n. Same as ZOODYNAMICS.—zo″o-mel'a-nin, n. Chem. A black animal pigment contained in the plumage of certain birds.—zo-om'e-try, n. Measurement of the parts of animals and determination of their relative magnitude.—zo″o-met'ric, a.—zo-on'o-sis, n. [-SES, pl.] A disease produced in man by infection from animal poisons, as from the rabies of the dog, the glanders of the horse, etc.—zo″o-no-sol'o-gy, n. The science of diseases peculiar to animals; zoopathology.—zo″o-par'a-site, n. A parasitic animal.—zo″o-pa-thol'o-gy, n. Knowledge of the diseases of animals; animal pathology. zo-op'a-thy;.—zo-oph'i-list, n. A lover of animals.—zo-oph'i-lous, a.—zo-oph'i-ly, n.—zo″oph-thal'mus, n. Dropsy of the eye.—zo″o-physics, n. The study of the structure of animal bodies; comparative anatomy; animal morphology: an exceptional and loose use of the word physics. See PHYSICS.—zo″o-plas'tic, a. Pertaining to or having the nature of that operation by which a part of an animal body is grafted on some part of a human body. Compare ZOOGRAFT.—zo'o-sco″py, n. A hallucination in which animal forms appear.—zo″o-scop'ic, a.—zo'o-tax-y, n. The classification of animals; systematic zoology. Compare PHYTOTAXY.—zo″o-the'ca, n. [-CÆ, pl.] Bot. Same as ZOOSPORANGIUM.—zo″o-the'cal, a.—zo″o-the'ci-um, n. The investment or aggregated shells of an infusorian colony.—zo″o-the'ci-al, a.—zo'o-the-ism, n. A theism based upon the attribution of divine qualities to animals. The practical worship is called zoolatry; the principle, zoomorphism. See these words.—zo″o-the-is'tic, a.—zo″o-ther-a'pi-a, n. Treatment of diseases of domestic animals. zo″o-ther'a-py;.—zo'o-thome, n. A colony of coral-polyps as constituting an animal mass.—zo″o-troph'ic, a. Pertaining to the nourishment of animals.—zo″o-xan-thel'la, n. One of the yellow pigmentary particles of a radiolarian.

zo-œ'a, zo'œ-form, etc. Same as ZOEA, etc.

zo-œ'ci-um, zo-ī'shi-um or -ē'ci-um, n. One of the cells that form the investment of polyzoans. [< zo- + Gr. oikia, house.]—zo-œ'ci-al, a.

zo-og'a-my, zo-eg'ɑ-mi, n. Biol. Sexual reproduction; gamogenesis. [< zoo- + Gr. gamos, marriage.]
— zo-og'a-mous, a. Of or pertaining to zoogamy.
zo'o-gene, zō'o-jīn, a. Geol. Of, pertaining to, consisting of, resulting from, or indicative of animal life or structure. [< zoo- + -GENE.]
zo-og'e-ny, zo-oj'e-ni, n. The doctrine or process of the origination of living beings. [< zoo- + -GENY.]
— zo″o-gen'ic, a. Of or pertaining to zoogeny.
zo″o-ge-og'ra-phy, zō'o-je-eg'rɑ-fi, n. The science or description of the distribution of animals on the surface of the globe; faunal geography: opposed to phytogeography. See illus. below. [< zoo- + GEOGRAPHY.]
— zo″o-ge-og'ra-pher, n. — zo″o-ge″o-graph'ic, a. zo″o-ge″o-graph'ic-al‡.
zo″o-glœ'a, zō'o-glī'ɑ, n. [-æ, -ī or -ē, pl.] A colony of bacteria forming a jelly-like mass. [< zoo- + Gr. gloios, sticky stuff.] — zo″o-glœ'ic, zo″o-glœ'oid, a.
zo-og'o-ny, zo-eg'o-ni, n. Same as ZOOGENY.
zo-og'ra-fy, n. Zoography. PHIL. SOC.
zo-og'ra-phy, zo-eg'rɑ-fi, n. The branch of zoology that describes animals; descriptive zoology. [< zoo- + -GRAPHY.] — zo-og'ra-pher, n. zo-og'raph-ist‡. — zo″o-graph'ic, a. zo″o-graph'ic-al‡.
zo″o-gy'ro-scope, zō'o-jī'ro-skōp, n. A device having a series of pictures mounted on a cylinder and revolved rapidly within a magic lantern so as to produce on a screen the appearance of some object, as an animal, in motion: practically a zoetrope combined with exhibiting mechanism. [< zoo- + GYROSCOPE.]
zo'oid, zō'eid, a. Having essentially the nature of an animal; endowed with organic life and motion. [< Gr. zōoeidēs, < zōon (see zoo-); and see -OID.] zo-oid'al‡.
zo'oid, n. 1. Zool. (1) One of the more or less independent products of non-sexual reproduction of a colonial organism; an individual, especially when without developed mouth or alimentary canal. (2) Any member of a compound organism.

In one case the reproductive zoöid has been known to attain a size of seven feet across, with tentacles fifty feet in length, though the fixed organism from which it was produced was no more than half an inch in height.
H. A. NICHOLSON Text-Book of Zoology ch. 3, p. 74. [W. B. '70.]

2. Biol. An organic body of obscure relationships or an organic cell capable of independent motion.
zooks, zūks, interj. [Archaic.] Same as GADZOOKS.
zo-ol'a-try, zo-ol'ɑ-tri, n. Anthrop. Animal-worship, as the cat-, bull-, and crocodile-worship of the Egyptians.

The religion of the Egyptians is zoölatry, or worship of the divinity in animals. SCHAFF Theol. Propæd. pt. i, ch. 34, p. 50. [S. '92.]

[< zoo- + Gr. latreia; see LATRIA.] zo″o-la'tri-a‡.
— zo-ol'a-ter, n. A worshiper of animals. — zo-ol'a-trous, a.
zo'o-lite, zō'o-līt, n. A petrified animal; an animal fossil. [< zoo- + -LITE.] zo'o-lith‡.
— zo″o-lit'ic, a. zo″o-lith'ic‡.
zo-ol'o-ger, zo-ol'o-jėr, n. A zoologist.
zo″o-log'ic-al, zō'o-loj'ic-ɑl, a. Of or pertaining to zoology; treating of animal organisms. zo″ol-og'ic‡.

The close observance of birds and beasts in zoological collections has tended to reduce many fabulous tales to sober reason.
A. WYNTER Curios. of Civilization, Zool. Gardens p. 112. [E. H.]

— zoological garden, a park or garden in which animals of various kinds are kept in enclosures on exhibition.
zo″o-log'ic-al-ly, zō'o-loj'ic-ɑl-i, adv. In a zoological manner; in accordance with zoological principles; from a zoological point of view.

Borneo and New Guinea, as alike physically as two distinct countries can be, are zoologically wide as the poles asunder.
A. R. WALLACE Malay Archipelago ch. 1, p. 27. [H. '69.]

zo-ol'o-gist, zo-ol'o-jist, n. A specialist in zoology.
zo-ol'o-gize, zo-ol'o-jaiz, vi. [-GIZED; -GI'ZING.] To practise the study of zoology.

But his [Alton Locke's] love of nature was so intense, that he found his delight in zoologizing among the beetles and worms, which children in general shun. PETER BAYNE Essays, Charles Kingsley in second series, p. 21. [G. & L. '67.]

zo-ol'o-gy, zo-ol'o-ji, n. 1. The science, or the branch of biology, that treats of animals with reference to their structure, functions, development, analysis, nomenclature, and classification. The principal divisions are: (1) mammalogy, treating of mammals; (2) ornithology, of birds; (3) herpetology, of reptiles; (4) ichthyology, of fishes and lower aquatic vertebrates; (5) acediology, of the Tunicata; (6) echinology, of the Echinodermata; (7) conchology, of the Molluscs; (8) entomology, of the Insecta; (9) arachnology, of the Arachnida (spiders, scorpions, etc.); (10) crustaceology, of the Crustacea; (11) helminthology, of the Vermes, or worms; (12) zoophytology or cœlenterology, of the Cœlentera; (13) spongiology, of the Porifera, or sponges; and (14) protozoology, of the Protozoa. For classification of animal life, see ANIMAL KINGDOM, under ANIMAL.

John Ray was the first to raise zoology to the rank of a science.
Green's Short Hist. Eng. People ch. 9, § 1, p. 597. [H. '75.]

2. The animal kingdom, or local examples of it, regarded biologically; as, the zoology of Borneo.

The most important recent addition to zoology, is, undoubtedly, the gorilla. P. H. GOSSE Romance of Nat. Hist. first series, ch. 11, p. 234. [L. '75.]

3. Written description of animals; a treatise on animals from a scientific point of view; zoography. [< zoo- + -LOGY.] — systematic zoology, the division of zoology that considers animals in their morphological relations to each other.
Zoo'loo, a. & n. Same as ZULU.
zo″o-mor'phic, zō'o-mēr'fic, a. 1. Pertaining to or of the nature of zoomorphism: correlated to anthropomorphic.

All pre-Christian religions have their 'zoomorphic' . . . idols, gods in the shape of the lower animals. ANDREW LANG Myth., Ritual, and Religion vol. i, ch. 1, p. 9. [L. G. & CO. '87.]

2. Representing animals in art, as in ornamental carving. [< zoo- + Gr. morphē, shape.]
zo″o-mor'phism, zō'o-mēr'fizm, n. 1. Anthrop. The conception, symbolization, or representation of a man or a god in the form of an animal; also, the attribution of divine or human qualities to animals.

If nature-worship, with the animism that it engenders, shapes the first law to which nascent religion submits in the human race, anthropomorphism furnishes the second, disengaging itself ever more and more completely from the zoomorphism which generally serves as an intermediary.
E. CLODD Myths and Dreams pt. ii, § 10, p. 215. [C. & W. '85.]

2. The representation of animals or animal forms. 3†. Transformation into animals. zo'o-mor″phy‡.
zo'on, zō'on, n. [ZO'ONS or ZO'A, pl.] 1. The total product of a fertilized ovum. 2. A developed individual of a compound animal. [< Gr. zōon; see zoo-.] — zo'o-nal, a. Of, pertaining to, or of the nature of a zoon. — zo'o-nite, n. 1. One of the segments of an articulate animal; a metamere. 2. A zoöid. zo'o-nule‡. — zo″o-nit'ic, a. Of or pertaining to a zoonite; metameric.
zo″on-er-yth'rin, zō'on-er-ith'rin, n. Chem. Same as ZOOERYTHRIN. [< Gr. zōon (see zoo-) + ERYTHORIN.]
zo-on'ic, zo-on'ic, a. Of, pertaining to, or derived from animals or animal matter. [< Gr. zōon; see zoo-.]
— zoonic acid (Chem.), impure acetic acid: so called by Berthollet, who obtained it by the dry distillation of animal substances.
zo-on'o-my, zo-on'o-mi, n. The science of the laws of animal life as distinguished from those of vegetable life.

If we could pair ourselves as we pair our live stock, and give ear to the teaching of an enlightened zoönomy, we might soon drive many of our fellest diseases out of our breed. JOHN BROWN Spare Hours, Notes on Art in first series, p. 446. [T. & F. '62.]

[< zoo- + -NOMY.] zo″o-no'mi-a‡.
— zo″o-nom'ic, a. — zo-on'o-mist, n.
Zo-oph'a-ga, zo-ef'ɑ-gɑ, n. pl. 1. Mam. A section of marsupials with carnivorous habits. 2. Mam. Carnivorous mammals. 3. Conch. A division of gastropods with carnivorous habits. [< Gr. zōophagos, living on animals, < zōon (see zoo-) + phagein, eat.] — zo-oph'a-gan, a. & n.
zo-oph'a-gous, zo-ef'ɑ-gus, a. Feeding on animals.
zo-oph'o-rus, zo-ef'o-rus, n. A continuous frieze sculptured in relief with the forms of men and animals. [< Gr. zōophoros, < zōon (see zoo-) + pherō, bear.]
— zo″o-phor'ic, a. Supporting or bearing the figures of animals or men: said of columns, walls, etc.
zo-oph'y-ta, zo-ef'i-tɑ, C. W.[1] (zō'o-fai'tɑ, W.[2]), n. pl. Zool. A division of the animal kingdom, variously ranked and limited, formerly including radiates: now generally limited to or replaced by Cœlenterata. [< Gr. zōophyton, < zōon (see zoo-) + phyton, plant.]
Zo-oph″y-ta'ri-a, zo-ef'i-tē'ri-ɑ or -tɑ'ri-ɑ, n. pl. Zooph. The Alcyonaria. [< Gr. zōophyton; see ZOOPHYTA.] — zo-oph″y-ta'ri-an, a. & n.
zo'o-phyte, zō'o-fait, n. 1. An invertebrate animal that somewhat resembles a plant in external form or mode of growth, as a coral, sea-anemone, polyzoan, or sponge; especially, an animal forming branching or tree-like colonies, as a coral or hydroid.

In all the seas, and from the earliest ages, zoophytes have lived, and assumed a marvellous variety of shapes and specialisation of functions. LEWES Physical Basis of Mind prob. i, § 130, p. 126. [T. & CO. '77.]

2. One of the Zoophyta. [< Gr. zōophyton; see ZOOPHYTA.] zo-oph'y-ton‡ [-TA, pl.] [Gr.].
— zo″o-phyt'ic, a. Of or pertaining to a zoophyte. zo″o-phyt'ic-al‡. — zo-oph'y-told, a. Resembling a zoophyte. — zo″o-phy-tol'o-gy, C. W.[2] (zo-oph″y-tol'o-gy, W.[1]), n. Zool. A branch of zoology treating of the zoophytes or cœlenterates. — zo″o-phy″to-log'ic-al, a. — zo″o-phy-tol'o-gist, n.
zo″o-prax'i-scope, zō'o-prax'i-skōp, n. 1. An apparatus on the principle of the phenakistoscope, for exhibition with a magic lantern, having its disks capable of motion in opposite directions: used especially for combining photographs of animal movements, etc., taken with scientific precision. See PHENAKISTOSCOPE. 2. A phenakistoscope. [< zoo- + Gr. praxis (see PRAXIS) + -SCOPE.] zo″o-prax'i-no-scope″‡.
zo″o-prax-og'ra-phy, zō'o-prax-eg'rɑ-fi, n. [Recent.] The science illustrative and descriptive of animal locomotion. [< zoo- + Gr. praxis (see PRAXIS) + -GRAPHY.] — zo″o-prax″o-graph'ic-al, a.
zo″o-psy-chol'o-gy, zō'o-sai-cel'o-ji, n. The psychology of the lower animals. [< zoo- + PSYCHOLOGY.]
— zo″o-psy″cho-log'ic-al, a. — zo″o-psy-chol'o-gist, n.
zo'o-sperm, zō'o-sperm, n. 1. Bot. Same as ZOOSPORE. 2. Physiol. A spermatozoon. [< zoo- + SPERM[1].] — zo″o-sper-mat'ic, a. — zo″o-sper'mi-um, n. A spermatozoon; zoosperm.
zo″o-spo-ran'gi-o-phore, zō'o-spo-ran'ji-o-fōr, n. Bot. A sporangiophore bearing zoosporangia.

The propagating zoospores are borne in zoosporanges at the end of cylindrical or club-shaped zoosporangiophores in vertical series.
BENNETT AND MURRAY Cryptogamic Botany, Fungi p. 326. [L. G. & CO. '69.]

[< ZOOSPORANGIUM + Gr. pherō, bear.]
zo″o-spo-ran'gi-um, zō'o-spo-ran'ji-um, n. [-GI-A, pl.] Bot. A sporangium producing zoospores. [< zoo- + Gr. spora (see SPORE[1]) + angeion, dim. of angos, vessel.] zo o-spo-range″‡.
— zo″o-spo-ran'gi-al, a.
zo'o-spore, zō'o-spōr, n. Bot. A spore possessing the power of independent motion, generally by means of cilia; a swarm-spore, or motile spore.

In some cases, particularly among the Algæ and also in some Fungi, . . . spores are produced which are for a time destitute of any cell-wall, and . . . are motile, and are therefore termed zoospores.
S. H. VINES in Encyc. Brit. 9th ed., vol. XX, p. 423.

— Zo″o-spo're-æ, n. pl. Bot. A questionable group of green or olive-green algæ characterized by the production of zoospores. — zo″o-spor'ic, a. Bot. Of or in any way relating to a zoospore. — zo″o-spo-rif'er-ous, a. Bot. Bearing zoospores.
zo″o-tech'nics, } zō'o-tec'nics, zō'o-tec'ni, n. The zo'o-tech″ny, } science relating to the breeding and domestication of animals. [< zoo- + Gr. technē, art.]
— zo″o-tech'nic. 1. a. Pertaining to zootechnics. II. n. Zootechnics.
zo″o-thap'sis, zō'o-thap'sis, n. Premature burial of one supposed dead. [< zoo- + Gr. thaptō, bury.]
zo-ot'ic, zo-ot'ic, a. Containing evidences of former life, as certain soils and caves. [< Gr. zōon; see zoo-.]
Zo-ot'o-ca, zo-ot'o-cɑ, n. pl. Zool. Viviparous vertebrates; Vivipara; mammals. [< Gr. zōotokos, viviparous, < zōon (see zoo-) + tiktō, bear.]
— zo″o-to-col'o-gy, n. [Rare.] Animal biology.
zo-ot'o-my, zo-ot'o-mi, n. The dissection of animals; comparative anatomy.

Important were the advances made in the sphere of organic life and in the general views of comparative zootomy.
HUMBOLDT Cosmos tr. by E. C. Otté, vol. ii, pt. ii, p. 163. [H. '59.]

[< zoo- + -TOMY.] — zo″o-tom'ic, zo″o-tom'ic-al, a. Of or pertaining to zootomy. — zo″o-tom'ic-al-ly, adv. — zo-ot'o-mist, n. One versed in zootomy.
zo'o-trope, zō'o-trōp, n. Same as ZOETROPE. zoo'zoo, zū'zū, n. [Prov. Eng.] The wood-pigeon.
zope, zōp, n. [G.] A European bream (Abramis balterus).
zo'pi-lote, zō'pi-lōt, W., or zō-pi-lō'te, C., n. [Mex.] A turkey-buzzard, especially the urubu. zo'pi-lot‡.

The business of clearing the fields of Mexico is reserved principally for the zopilots, known in South America by the name of gallinazzi; . . . in some places, though very improperly, by that of ravens. There are two very different species; . . . the one, the zopilot, properly so called; the other, called the cozcaquauhtli; . . . both bigger than the raven.
WILSON in Wilson and Bonaparte's Am. Ornithology, Black Vulture in vol. iii, p. 141. [BOU. '77.]

zy'moid, zāi'moid, a. Resembling or having a nature like a zyme or ferment. [< Gr. zymōdēs, < zymē (see ZYME); and see -OID.]

zy-mol'o-gy, zāi-mel'o-ji, n. The knowledge or study of the principles of fermentation; also, a treatise on fermentation. [< ZYMO- + -LOGY.]— zy"mo-log'ic, a. zy"mo-log'ic-al‡.— zy-mol'o-gist, n.

zy-mol'y-sis, zāi-mel'i-sis, n. Same as ZYMOSIS, 1. [< ZYMO- + Gr. lysis, loosing, < lyō, loose.]

zy"mo-lyt'ic, zāi'mo-lit'ic, a. Same as ZYMOTIC.

zy'mome, zāi'mōm, n. That part of gluten insoluble in alcohol: no longer used. [< Gr. zymōma, fermented mass, < zymē; see ZYME.] zi'mome‡.

zy-mom'e-ter, zāi-mem'e-ter, n. An instrument for measuring the degree of fermentation. [< ZYMO- + -METER.] zy"mo-sim'e-ter‡.

zy'mo-phyte, zāi'mo-fait, n. A bacterial ferment capable of liberating fatty acids from neutral fats. [< ZYMO- + Gr. phyton, plant, < phyō, grow.]

zy'mo-scope, zāi'mo-scōp, n. An instrument by means of which the effect of yeast upon sugar-water, in evolving carbon dioxid, gives a measure of its fermenting power: invented by Zemneck. [< ZYMO- + -SCOPE.]

zy-mose', zāi-mōs', n. Chem. Invertin. [W.]

zy-mo'sis, zāi-mō'sis, n. 1. Any form of fermentation; especially, morbific fermentation. zy-mol'y-sis‡. 2. Any contagious or infectious disease produced by morbific fermentation. [< Gr. zymōsis, < zymē; see ZYME.]

zy"mo-tech'nics, zāi'mo-tec'nics, n. The art of producing and utilizing fermentation. [< ZYMO- + Gr. technē, art.]— zy"mo-tech'nic, -al, a.

zy-mot'ic, zāi-met'ic, a. Relating to or produced by or from fermentation. [< Gr. zymōtikos, < zymōsis; see ZYMOSIS.]

— zymotic disease, any epidemic, endemic, or contagious disease capable of being induced or produced by some morbific element or agent incident to the process or condition of fermentation.— z. papilloma, same as FRAMBŒSIA.— z. principle, a specific matter or element that of itself propagates a zymotic disease; as, the zymotic principle of smallpox or of syphilis.— z. theory, the hypothesis that a poisonous particle, either atmospheric or communicated by contact, acts as a ferment to produce certain diseases.

— zy-mot'ic-al-ly, adv. After the manner or nature of zymotic diseases.

Zy"mo-zoi'da, zāi'mo-zei'da, n. pl. Biol. Same as SCHIZOMYCETES. Cy"mo-zoi'da‡.

zy'mur-gy, zāi'mūr-ji, n. A branch of technological chemistry treating of processes in which fermentation is the principal feature, as brewing, making of yeast, and wine-making. [< ZYMO- + Gr. ergon, work.]

Zyr'i-an, zir'i-an, n. One of a group of Permic people on the Ural slopes. See PERMIC. Ko'mi-yurt‡.

zy-rich'thys, n. Same as XYRICHTHYS.

Zy'ruk, zāi'rūk, n. A dialect of Pushtu or Afghan.

zy-thep'sa-ry†, n. A brewery.

zy'thum, zāi'thum or zi'thum, n. A kind of malt liquor used in ancient Egypt.

Throughout the upper and lower country, wine was the favourite beverage of the wealthy [Egyptians]: they had also very excellent beer, called zythus, which Diodorus, though wholly unaccustomed to it, and a native of a wine country, affirms was scarcely inferior to the juice of the grape. J. G. WILKINSON Ancient Egyptians vol. i, ch. 5, p. 395. [8. & w. '79.]

[L., < Gr. zythos, zythum.] zy'them‡; zy'thus‡.

zyx-om'ma, six-em'a, n. An Indian libellulid dragonfly (genus Zyxomma) having a large head, narrow face, and very large eyes. [< Gr. zeuxis, a joining (see ZEUXITE), + omma, eye.]

ADDENDA.

a-can'thi-on, a-can'thi-en, n. A craniometrical point. See CRANIOMETRY. [< Gr. akanthion, dim. of akantha, spine; see ACANTHA.]

al'ge-bra, al'je-bra. [Note.]

The principal branches of algebra may be broadly classified as follows: (1) The theory of numbers, treating of the general principles of number apart from any arbitrary system of notation and their application to such problems as that of the determination of primes. (2) The theory of equations and the study of certain functions having special relations to their solution, as determinants and invariants. (3) The infinitesimal calculus, embracing differential and integral calculus, the calculus of variations, infinite series, and differential equations together with the functions specially related to their solution, as elliptic integrals. (4) The theory of functions, treating of the functions mentioned under the two branches just preceding, and all other functions, as subject to the same general laws and as examples of a great class of quantities. (5) Multiple algebras, based on two or more units differing in kind, arising originally from a consideration of so-called imaginaries, and including quaternions and other vector analyses. See the full-faced and italicized words, in vocabulary.

al'ter-na"tor, al'ter-nē"ter, n. Elec. A dynamo giving an alternating current.

a-nath'e-sis, a-nath'e-sis, n. Same as MUTATION, 3.

an-tin'i-on, an-tin'i-en, n. [Additional sense.] A craniometrical point. See CRANIOMETRY.

ap"pli-ca'tion, ap'li-kē'shun, n. [Additional sense.] The part of a sermon in which the speaker makes practical application of his subject to the audience; peroration.

as-ta'si-a, as-tē'si-a, n. Med. Want of equilibrium; restlessness; also, muscular tremor. [< Gr. astasia, < a- priv. + histēmi, stand.]

au-ric"u-la're, ô-ric"yu-lē're, n. A craniometrical point. See CRANIOMETRY. [< L. auricula; see AURICLE.

beam, bim, n. [Additional sense.] Mech. In a steam-engine or motor, same as WALKING-BEAM.

blank, blank, a. [Additional sense.] Presenting a solid aspect or form, in lieu of customary open space or in advance of the cutting away of portions; as, a blank door or window; a blank key.

block, blec, n. [Additional sense.] Cricket. (1) The attitude of a batter when blocking a ball. (2) The position of a bat, before a wicket, previous to striking. Called also center, middle. (3) A block-hole.

block'-hole", blec'-hōl", n. Cricket. A mark on the grass, before the wicket, indicating the center: commonly abbreviated block, and called long b. when 1½ length of a bat, and short b. when only one bat's length.

brail"lé', brg'lyē', n. A system of printing in which the letters are raised above the surface; also, the letters themselves: used in books, etc., for the blind. [< M. Louis Braillé, of Paris, the inventor.]

break'ing, brēk'ing, n. Philol. Change of one vowel to two, one being a consonant glide, and the resulting digraph, especially Anglo-Saxon ea, eo, as in earm > arm; meolc, milk; sceacan, shake, etc.; so English fear, Southern cear > care, etc.

Bud'dha, bū'dc, n. [Additional sense.] A religious teacher; especially, a great teacher or reformer ("the wise or enlightened one"); an incarnation of the supreme intelligence or wisdom. See quotation under BUDDHA, in vocabulary.

The historical Buddha, the Gautama of this article, taught that he was one of a long series of Buddhas, who appear at intervals in the world and all teach the same doctrine. Encyc. Brit. 9th ed., vol. iii, p. 427, note.

butt³, but, n. [Additional sense.] In the tobacco-trade, a box 12 inches square, with a capacity of from 15 to 50 pounds.

coun'ter-vair, caun'tgr-vār, n. Her. One of the furs. See FUR. [< COUNTER- + VAIR.] con'tre-vair‡; coun'ter-vair-y‡.

crip'ple, crip'l, n. [Additional sense.] [Local, U. S.] A piece of marshy land with the timber cut off, but otherwise unimproved.

cup'-cake", cup'-kēk", n. A kind of plain cake: so named because, as originally made, most of the ingredients were measured by cupfuls.

de-cal"co-ma'ni-a, dē-cal"co-mē'ni-a or -mg"ni-a, n. [Additional sense.] Loosely, the ornamentation of glassware by gumming pictures on the interior surface.

de-lin'quent, dē-liu'cwent, a. [Additional sense.] Of or pertaining to delinquency; due and unpaid: used especially in tax laws; as, delinquent taxes; a delinquent list.

divinity circuit binding, a style of binding in which the sides of a book are made to overlap the edges so as to protect them from injury, as when the book is carried on circuit: said specifically of Bibles.

doff'er-roll", def'gr-rōl", n. Mach. In a mangle, the roller that delivers the cloth.

drag'on-et, drag'un-et.— gemmous dragonet, a callionymoid fish (Callionymus lyra) with gem-like spots. gow'die‡.

e-mis'si-ble, ē-mis'i-bl, a. That can be emitted.

e-mit'ta-ble, ē-mit'a-bl. That can be emitted.

ex-tend', ex-tend', vt. [Additional sense.] Physiol. To stretch out or unbend: opposed to flex; as, the extensor indicis muscle extends the forefinger.

fall'ing-guard", fēl'ing-gārd", n. Same as LANGUET (2).

far'i-nose, far'i-nōs, n. Same as STARCH-CELLULOSE.

fir'ing-pin", fair'ing-pin", n. Firearms. A sliding pin used to discharge a cartridge. See illus. under RIFLE and REVOLVER.

frau, frau, n. [FRAU'EN, pl.] [G.] 1. Mistress; Mrs.: a title; as, Frau Schmitt. 2. A married woman; as, an old frau came to the door.

fräu'lein, froi'lain, n. [G.] A young unmarried woman; as a form of address equivalent to miss.

frog'-eyed", freg'-aid", a. Characterized by the presence of minute circular whitish spots on the leaves, indicating the presence of a peculiar disease: said of tobacco-plants, especially those grown in Florida.

gauss, gaus, n. Elec. A practical magnetic unit. See UNIT. [< Karl F. Gauss (1777–1856), German mathematician.]

ge-om'e-try, je-em'e-tri. [Note.]

Geometry may be classified (1) according to the method of reasoning used, as synthetic and analytical; (2) according to the subject-matter, as plane, spherical, and solid; (3) according to the treatment or its purpose, as descriptive, projective, and metric; or (4) according to the axioms with which it sets out, as Euclidean and non-Euclidean, the latter embracing elliptic and hyperbolic. See phrases, in vocabulary.

ger'mi-na"tor, jer'mi-nē"ter, n. An apparatus for testing the germinating capacity of seeds. seed'-test"er‡.

gil'bert, gil'bert, n. Elec. A practical magnetic unit. See UNIT. [< William Gilbert (1540-1603), English physicist.]

gov'ern-ment, guv'grn-ment, n. [Additional sense.] An administrative division of Russia, equivalent to a province.

The Roman alphabet is used in this key in place of the German characters.

Syllables ending in a vowel are called open; those ending in a consonant, closed.

In modern European languages accented e in open syllables has a sound like that of a in fate (ê) without the vanish, and i the sound of i in machine (ĭ).

ANGLO-SAXON.

Anglo-Saxon words take the Germanic accent on the first root-syllable, or distinctive nominal prefix. The letters given are the Roman letters as used in Britain at the time of the conversion of the Anglo-Saxon, except the runes, thorn (Þ) and wēn (w) and the crossed d (ð) used as a graphic variation of thorn (Þ) in the manuscripts, but for dh in works on phonology. Further description and discussion of the sounds and letters may be found in the vocabulary under the corresponding English letters.

DANISH.

The stress of pure Danish words is placed on the radical syllable, usually the first, unless compounded with the German prefixes, be-, er-, for-.

1. A has the sound of ɑ̄ in arm; aa (or å), of ō in no.
2. E final in accented syllables has the sound of ê = a in fate; elsewhere, of e in net; æ = ê.
3. C before a, aa, o, u has the sound of k; before e, i, ö, y the sound of s.
4. D initial is pronounced as d in did; between two vowels, or at the end of a syllable after a vowel, it has the sound of dh = th in then. D before t or s and also final after l, n, r, t is silent.
5. G after a vowel in monosyllables has a slightly guttural sound; elsewhere, as g in go.
6. H before j and v is silent; elsewhere, aspirated.
7. I in open accented syllables and in monosyllables, also ĭ, has the sound of i in machine; elsewhere, of i in it. J has the sound of y in yet.
8. O open has the sound of ō in no; closed, of o in not. Ö or oe has the sound of ū = u in burn.
9. U open has the sound of ŭ in rule; closed, of u in full.
10. V after s has the sound of u in full; elsewhere, of v.
11. Y has the sound of French u, as in dûne. W, x, and z are found only in foreign words.

DUTCH.

For accent, see German.

1. A, i, o, u in open syllables, and the double vowels, aa, etc., have the sounds of ɑ̄, ī, ō, ū, respectively.
2. E ending an accented syllable, and ee, have the sound of ê = a in fate.
3. E (or ee) before r has the sound of ā, as in fare.
4. E unaccented and final has the sound of e in over.
5. D final has the sound of t; elsewhere, as d in did; dt = t.
6. E before a double consonant (or two or more consonants) has the sound of e in net.
7. Ij, ch, and g have no equivalents in English. Ij and y approach the sound of ɑi in aisle; ch and g, of ʜ = ch in loch. Ei = ɑi.
8. I before a consonant in the same syllable has the sound of i in it. For open i (=ī), see ĭ. Ie = ī.
9. O closed has two sounds, the o of obey, and before two or more consonants the ɵ of not.
10. R is trilled more than in English.
11. Sch final or before a mute e has the sound of sh.
12. U open, see French, 11; u closed has the sound of u in up; ui = ei; oe = u.
13. W is a little softer than in English in closed syllables.

FLEMISH.

The Flemish is so closely allied to the Dutch that it is not given separately in the key.

FRENCH.

The French language when spoken has no decided accent, but nearly all the syllables are uttered with an equal stress of voice. To an English ear the stress seems to fall on the final syllable; hence, in this dictionary the primary accent (′) has been placed over the last syllable of most French words, and the secondary accent (‘) on the other syllables (except over obscure ɵ), to indicate a careful enunciation of all the unaccented syllables.

1. a, à, â, e, é, è, ê, ĭ, ĭ, o, ô, ū, and û in open syllables have the sound of ɑ̄, ê, ī, ō, and ū, respectively. Final d, g, n, s, t, x, and z are usually silent, and leave the syllable open.
2. A, e, i, y, and o in closed syllables have their short sounds ɑ, e, i, o; au and eau = ō.
3. E before r and not followed by a second consonant has the sound of ā in fare; è before r = ā.
4. E in unaccented open syllables has the sound of e in over. E final is silent; ei = ê; ie and y = ī.
5. Final c, f, l (not liquid), and r (after a, i, y, o, u) are sounded. Ch has the sound of sh in she. C before a, o, u, and ch before a consonant in the same syllable, have the sound of c (= k) in cat. C before e, i, y, or with the cedilla (ç), has the sound of s. Q and qu are generally like k.
6. D, p, s, and t are generally pronounced as in English. D final is silent, except in proper names; before a vowel sound beginning the next word d has the sound of t. S between two vowels has the sound of z. Ti = sī.
7. G before a, o, or u has the sound of g in go; before e, i, or y, of zh = z in azure. Gn = ny (nī in union).
8. H is generally silent.
9. L is sounded as in English. Ll after i not initial has a peculiar liquid sound (l̄), nearly like lli in brilliant.
10. M and n initial doubled or before a vowel sound are pronounced as in English, but a single m or n final in a word or syllable gives to the preceding vowel a peculiar nasal sound: viz., -am, -an, -em, -en, -oin = ɑ̃ṅ (ah resonant through open nostrils); -im, -in, -ym, -yn, -aim, -ain, -eim, -ein = aṅ (an in angry); -om, -on = ōṅ (on in longer); -um, -un = uṅ (un in hunger); ent in third person plural of verbs is silent.
11. Ü has no equivalent in English; to make its sound, place the mouth for ĭ (i of machine), and attempt to pronounce ū (u of rule); û = ŭ.
12. W is found in words of foreign origin only.
13. X is pronounced as x in wax, except when initial and followed by a vowel or silent consonant, when it has the sound of z.

GERMAN.

In German every noun begins with a capital letter. The accent of German words is generally on the root syllables in simples and derivatives, and on the first member of compounds.

1. E in accented open syllables has the sound of ê = a in fate; before r, two consonants, or a double consonant, the sound of e in net; final, and often in final unaccented syllables, the sound of e in over; ä = ā or ê.
2. B, d, p, and t are pronounced as in English, except that b and d final, or immediately before a final consonant, have the sound of p and t. Dt and th = t. Ti in -tion = ts.
3. C before a, o, u, or a consonant has the sound of k; before ä, e, i, y, the sound of ts.
4. Ch has no equivalent in English, and is like ʜ = ch in loch; initial it has the sound of c in cat, except in words of French origin, where it sounds like sh in she.
5. I and y in open syllables or before a single consonant have the sound of ī in machine; in closed syllables, of ĭ in it. Ai, ei, and ey = ɑi. Ie = ī.
6. G initial is pronounced as g in go; elsewhere, it is strongly aspirated = ʜ. Ng has the sound of ng in singer.
7. H initial is aspirated; final or after a vowel it is silent, and lengthens the vowel.
8. O before two consonants or a double consonant has the sound of o in not; elsewhere, as in no.
9. R, see Dutch, 10.
10. S initial or after a consonant (except b, ch, and p) has the sound of z. S final, ss, and sz have the sound of s in hiss. Sch = sh.
11. Ü open has the sound of u in rule; closed, of u in full. Üi = wī (we in weal).
12. Ü, see French, 11.

in cat," Danish column "3 c²," means that c is the third letter in the Danish alphabet, that it has the force of c in cat, and is more fully explained in remark 3 of the Danish explanatory notes below.— Prepared by Mrs. E. F. Roberts assisted by native linguists.

GREEK, CLASSIC.

Every initial vowel or diphthong has the rough breathing (ʽ) or the smooth breathing (ʼ). The rough breathing indicates that the vowel over which it is placed is preceded by the sound of h; the smooth breathing, that it is not aspirated.

1. Γ, γ (g) before γ (g), κ (k), χ (ch), or ξ (x) has the sound of n in ink; elsewhere, of g in go.
2. Z, ζ (z) initial has the sound of z; elsewhere, generally dz, sometimes dz.
3. Ω, ω and O, o, open, have the same sound in prose; in poetry ω is prolonged.

GREEK, MODERN.

1. Π, π (p) after μ (m) sounds like b; elsewhere, like p.
2. Τ, τ (t) after ν (n) is like d; elsewhere, like t.
3. Υ, υ (consonant) before a vowel or before λ (l), μ (m), ν (n), or ρ (r) has the sound of v; elsewhere, of f in fun.
4. See GREEK, CLASSIC, 3.

HEBREW.

Hebrew is written from right to left. Its alphabet consists of 22 consonants. To supply the lack of vowels nine points are used in connection with the consonants.

ָ = ɑ̄	ַ = a	ֲ = a very short
ִ = ī	ֵ = ī	ֱ = e very short
ֵי or ֶי = ê	ֶ = e	ֳ = e very short
ֹ or ◌ֺ = ō	ֹ = o	ֵ = o very short
ֻ = ū	ֻ = u

1. א (ʼ), the first letter of the Hebrew alphabet, has no equivalent in English. It is a "soft breathing."
2. ה (h), the 8th letter, is a "rough breathing."
2. ע (ʽ), the 16th letter of the Hebrew alphabet, is a deep guttural, and has no equivalent in English.
4. ק (q), the 19th letter, and כ (k), the 11th letter, are like deep k. ל, the 6th letter, is like waft or v in van.

HUNGARIAN.

The mark of accent (ʹ) is used over vowels to distinguish them from the same vowel unaccented, thus: á = ɑ̄; a = o; é = ê; e = e; í = ī; i = i; ó = ō; o = o; ú = ū; u = u. Hungarian is one of the Ural-Altaic languages in which the accent is on the root syllable, which is generally the first syllable, and the following syllables observe the law of harmonic sequence of vowels. See HARMONIC SEQUENCE.

1. C or cz = ts in lasts; cs, ts, and ty = ch in church; ds = j in jest.
2. G followed by j or y is like j in jest; elsewhere, g and gh are like g in go.
3. H is always aspirated.
4. J (consonant) = y in yet; j (vowel) = ī in machine; dy (also gy) = j in jest; ly (ll) = lli in brilliant; ny = ni in union.
5. R, see DUTCH, 10.
6. S = sh in she; sz = s in hiss; zs = zh.
7. Y is generally a consonant; y (vowel) = ī.

ITALIAN.

Italian words are generally accented on the penult.

1. E in open syllables has the sound of a in fate; in closed, of a in fare.
2. C and cc before a, o, u, and ch before e and i, have the sound of k.
3. C and cc before e and i have the sound of ch in church.
4. G before a, o, u, and gh before e and i, have the sound of g in go.
5. G before a and i has the sound of j in jest. Gg = dj. Gl = lli in brilliant. Gn = ny (ni in union).
6. H has no sound of its own. Ch = c in cab; gh = g in go.
7. O open has the sound of o in no; closed, of o in not.
8. R, see DUTCH, 10.
9. S initial has the sound of s in hiss; between two vowels, of z in zone. Sc before e and i has the sound of sh in she; sch and sc before a, o, and u have the sound of sk.
10. Z before i followed by a second vowel has the sound of ts in lasts; initial, or after a consonant, of dz; zz = ts.

LATIN (ENGLISH METHOD).

1. A, e, i or y, o, and u, ending accented syllables, have the sound of ē, ī, ɑ̄i, ō, and yū (iū after a consonant in the same syllable). U after d or l generally has the sound of u in rule.
2. A, e, i or y, o, and u before a consonant in an accented syllable have the sound of a, e, ĭ, e, u. Ae and oe follow the rules for e.
3. A final unaccented or in an unaccented syllable has the sound of a in sofa.
4. E, o, and u ending an unaccented syllable (not final) have the sounds of e in believe (ę), o in obey (o), and u in full (u) or duration (iu) respectively. E before r has the sound of e in her.
5. I final has the sound of ī in pine (ɑ̄i); i and y have the sound of i in it when ending an unaccented syllable not initial. Plural es final has the sound of iz and os of ōz.
6. Consonants are the same as in English.
7. C and g are hard (= k and g) before a, o, u; soft (= s and j), before e, i, y.
8. Ci, si, and ti directly after an accented syllable and before a vowel have the sound of sh or zh; xi = ksh.
9. S final and x initial have the sound of z in zone.
10. I immediately before a vowel and after an accented a, e, o, or y not initial has nearly the sound of y in yet.

NORWEGIAN.

The Norwegian alphabet is the same as the Danish, with few exceptions, in sound. D final in many Norwegian nouns and adjectives has the sound of t, and is silent in some pronouns. G before ä, e, i, ö, and y has the sound of y in yet. Hv often has the sound of kv, and sk that of sh in she.

POLISH.

The stress is on the penult, except in some compound words. Ze, li, by, yo, suffixed to strengthen the pronouns, do not change the accent.

1. Ch, see GERMAN, 4.
2. L is pronounced as in English, but Ł is peculiar to the Polish language, and is formed by forcing the tongue-tip against the teeth.
3. M and n are pronounced as in English.
4. O unaccented has the sound of o in no; accented, the sound of u in full.
5. R, see DUTCH, 10.
6. Sc has no equivalent in English, but is nearly like ts; cz = ch; dz = j; rz = zh; sz = sh.
7. Y is peculiar to the Slavonic languages, and is sounded something like the German ü, Greek υ.

PORTUGUESE.

The accentuation is similar to that of Spanish words.

1. C before a, o, u, l, or r has the sound of c (= k) in cat. Ç has the sound of s. Cc is separated in pronunciation, the first c being hard (= k), and the second hard (= k) before a, o, u, and soft (= s) before e, i, and y. Ch = sh.
2. G before a, o, u, or a consonant has the sound of g in go; before e, i, and y, the sound of j in jest.
3. H is silent. After l and n it gives the consonants a liquid sound; lh = ly; nh = ny (ni in union).
4. K is found only in foreign words.
5. M and n final or after e have a nasal sound (see FRENCH, 10); elsewhere, as in English.
6. O in open syllables has the sound of o in no; in closed syllables, of o in obey; ão and am = ɑ̃u: a final = ɑ in sofa.
7. Qua is pronounced cwɑ̄; que = kê; qui = kī.
8. S between two vowels has the sound of z in zone; elsewhere, as in English.
9. X is generally pronounced as sh in she; ex = x in wax.
10. Z final has the sound of s; elsewhere, as z in zone.

RUSSIAN.

The Russian alphabet is an enlarged Greek alphabet. New characters are added to express peculiar sounds.

Some of the letters have the same form as in the English alphabet, but retain the Greek sounds; as, B = v; H = n; P = r; C = s; Y = u, and X = kh.

1. Б (b) before П (p), Ф (ch), К, Х (ch = н) Т, Ш (sh), or С (s) has the sound of p; elsewhere, as in English.
2. Г (g) before К, Т, or Х (ch) has the sound of Н (= ch in loch); elsewhere, usually as g in go.
3. Е (ye) initial and unaccented has the sound of ye in yet; accented, of yo in yoke: not initial and unaccented, as e in net. Ѣ always has the sound of ye in yet; Э, the 31st letter, always has the sound of e in net; ё = yō.
4. І (ī) is used before a vowel, and Й (ĭ) before a consonant.
5. К (k) before Е, Т, or Х has the sound of ц (= ch in loch); elsewhere, as k in kink.
6. О (ō) accented is like o in nor; unaccented, a in arm; final, o in no.
7. Р (r) is pronounced as if double, like rr in hurry.
8. Й (ĭ) is used after a vowel and lengthens the vowel-sound, something like English y in boy (boĭ). Ы, the 28th letter, always has the sound of ĭ in it. Щ (shch) is the 26th letter in the Russian alphabet, and has no equivalent in English. Ъ, the 27th letter, is silent, but gives a harsh sound to the preceding consonant, as if it were doubled; Ь, the 29th letter, is mute, and gives the preceding consonant a soft liquid sound.
9. Ѵ, the 35th letter, is seldom used in Russian words.

SPANISH.

Words ending in a vowel are generally accented on the penultimate syllable; those ending in a consonant, on the final syllable.

1. C final, or before a, o, u, l, or r, has the sound of k; before e and i, the sound of th in thin.
2. Ch before a vowel having the circumflex accent has the sound of k; elsewhere, as ch in church.
3. G before a, o, u, l, or r has the sound of g in go; before e or i, of н (= ch in loch); gue, gui = gē, gī; gua = gwā; güe = gwē; güi = gwī; guo = gwō.
4. H is silent, except before ue, when it has a slightly nasal sound.
5. J has a harsh guttural sound, nearly like н (= ch in loch) or a strongly aspirated h.
6. Ll is like l and y (consonant) pronounced in one syllable. See Polish, 2. ñ = ny (ni in union).
7. R initial after l, n, s, and in compounds from a primitive in r, has a harsh, rough sound unlike anything in English; elsewhere, as r in roll.
8. Y alone after a vowel followed by a consonant or final has the sound of ĭ in machine; before a vowel in the same syllable, or between two vowels, it has the sound of j in jest.

SWEDISH.

The stress of Swedish words is on the root syllable.

1. C and ch, before a, o, u, aa, have the sound of k. C before e, i, y, ä and ö has the sound of s. Ch initial has the sound of ch in church; elsewhere, as k. Tj = ch.
2. D is pronounced as in English. Dt = t.
3. F final has the sound of v; elsewhere, as f in fun. Fv = v.
4. G ending a syllable after another consonant has the sound of g aspirated; before e, i, ä, ö, y, the sound of y in yet; elsewhere, as g in go.
5. H is silent before j or v; elsewhere, as h in hat.
6. K before n is sounded; before ä, e, i, y, and ö it has the sound of ch in church; elsewhere, as k in kink; kj = ch; qu = kv.
7. The vowel-sounds are pronounced long or short, according to certain stress or accentuation; no fixed rules can be given for their use. A, i, ä, and ö = ā, ī, ē, and ō; aa (å) = ō; e accented = ī (pronounced quickly); o final = ō, and elsewhere it is like u in full.

WELSH.

Welsh words are accented on the penult.

1. a = ā or a; e = ē or ă; o = ō or ŏ; u = ī or i; y = u or ū. See def. 8.
2. Ch (= н), see German, 4. F has the sound of v; ff = f.
3. Ng has the sound of ng in sing, and sometimes begins a syllable in Welsh.
4. H is aspirated, never silent.
5. I before a, e, o, u, and y, in the same syllable, has the sound of y in yet; elsewhere, as ī in machine or ĭ in it. Iw = iū or yū.
6. Ll has no equivalent in English. To make its sound, place the tongue as for l, and force the breath out of the right side of the mouth. See Polish (Ł), 2.
7. R, see Dutch, 10. Rh (the 21st letter) is never final, and has no equivalent in English.
8. Y in the penult or antepenult has the sound of u in up; final or in monosyllables like ĭ in it; circumflexed like ī in machine.

Diphthongs: ąĭ, aisle, Ĭ; ąu (ou), staut (stout); ei, cein; iu, fiud (feud), miusic (music).

For Script Alphabet, see p. 2106.

All the letters of this alphabet represent different elementary English sounds, except the duplicates k, q, and x, and the number of the elementary sounds is 32. There are only 28 letters, excluding the duplicates k, q, and x, in the common alphabet, so that there are 9 elementary sounds without letters.

2. Necessary New Letters, ą, ө, ų.

Three of these sounds are provided for by new letters, ą, ө, ų. In the old alphabet a and o stand for the same sounds. In the scientific alphabet the two familiar forms are differentiated, ą a are to be used for the sound in are, a a for that in am. In a similar manner capital U and lower-case u are differentiated, Ų u being used for the sound in full, U u for that in up. In this way I and J, V and U, are differentiated. C and G, ų and u, had been previously differentiated by adding a tag to the earlier letter; in that way the new ө is made; the breve of ŏ is dropped into the body of the letter.

3. Digraphs for Letters; ch, dh, ng, sh, th, zh.

The six remaining elementary sounds are denoted by digraphs. The digraphs ch as in church, ng as in king, sh as in she, th as in thin, are in familiar use for elementary sounds which are never denoted in English by a single letter. The reformers have only to set them apart formally as letters and give them a name as such. Zh does not occur in literary use, but the sound in occēzhun (occasion) has the same relation to that of sh in relēshun (relation) which z has to s, and it is freely and without objection recognized as zh. So d is to t, as dh is to th, as dhen is to thin. Ch is often analyzed into tsh, but it is given a place and a name with the digraph letters. Ph, named phĭ, is not counted, since its sound is represented by f.

4. Diphthongs expressed by their Elements.

ei, now printed oi, is received at once, and ąu, now printed ou, is seen to need two letters; but aĭ is so generally written ĭ, as in fine, pine, described as long ĭ, and printed ĭ in dictionaries, that the expansion of ĭt to aĭ surprises, and its accuracy is not at once perceived. A similar statement is true about iu, which is generally written u, as in music. But as u is found alone, as in full, rude, phonetic necessity requires some addition to the u of music, or change of ĭt; and so of aĭ; long i is the i of machine. Full diphthongal writing is now used in the Oxford dictionary, and in the works of the English philologists as well as those of other countries.

5. Diacritical Marks.

Long and Short.

The deliverance of the philologists is "It seems best to follow the Latin and other languages written in Roman letters in the use of a single sign for a short vowel and its long, distinguishing them, when great exactness is required, by a diacritical mark." The scientific alphabet as a practical reform alphabet was intended for use ultimately without diacritics in literature and common life. Italian, Spanish, Latin, and German are regarded as spelled phonetically, though a, e, i, and other vowels without diacritics are sometimes long and sometimes short. In English, however, the old spelling separates the short and long sounds of some of the letters. The long of i as in it is oftenest written ee, as in meet; the long of e as in bet is most familiar as a in fate, and many persons never notice, or know, that the sound of ee is i prolonged, or that the sound of a in fate is that of e in met prolonged. The spelling reformers generally give out the alphabet in complete pairs of long and short vowels, the long vowels uniformly distinguished with the macron.

For literature, spelling-reformers suggest the use of diacritics for long e and ĭ only, thus:

Hwen yuzing dhis Saientific Alfabet in popyular print, for ordineri buks and niuzpēperz, it iz not consideri neseseri tu emplei a daiacritical mark tu indikēt leng vouelz except in dhi kēs ov ĭ and ē. C must alwēz sound az k, but dhi filolojists cud not agrī tu rul out k.

6. The Diacritics of the Standard.

A pronouncing dictionary must of course use diacritics for all the long vowels. It is one of the purposes of the Standard to present to the public in its pronunciation the English vocabulary in the exact form proposed for reformed spelling, so that the Standard may be a standard of spelling for reformers as well as conservatives.

ê, î. It has seemed best to use the circumflex accent for ē and ī rather than the macron, to avoid the unhappy associations with ē and ī that are referred to above, and to accord with the literary printing of which a specimen has just been given.

⏑ ⌢. It has seemed best, also, to add to the scientific alphabet notation for variant obscure syllables. A large proportion of the unaccen ted vowels in English words have two pronunciations, equally good each in its own time, and freely used by the same persons—one formal, distinct, pedagogical, the other colloquial; the first may be accurately denoted by one of the letters of the scientific alphabet, the second is a variation from the first, a natural weakening of it, which can only be accurately described by giving its direction and limit. Two main directions are indicated in the Standard, one a narrowing in the direction of ĭ, of which ĭ is the limit, the other a failure to bring out the resonance of the vowel chamber, a change in the direction of ų, ū, as in but, burn. The first is denoted by ⏑, as in mountęn (mountain), added, the second by ⌢: mōmęnt, atęm. The use of ⏑ has been extended to ę as in ąsk, which has a variant pronunciation from ă as in far towards a as in fat. Unaccented ą as in sofa varying towards ų in up, and o as in theory also varying towards ų might have been printed with the ⌢ according to the system, but are printed without it for simplicity, their relations being such as to lead to no ambiguity.

7. Explanation of Letters.

The characters of the alphabet used in the Standard Dictionary will now be taken up in their alphabetical order, to set forth as plainly as possible the distinction between the sounds which they represent, and to indicate the words and syllables in which each character occurs in the common spelling. A further physiological description of the sounds, with important facts of history and philology connected with them, will be found under the English letters in their alphabetical order in the vocabulary.

8. Ą ą a a

Roman Italic Script

The first elementary sound in most alphabets is that of a in far, father. The character used for it in the Scientific Alphabet is like Greek α, Italic a, German a, and English script a. It is named (ah) from its sound; sometimes alpha, its Greek name. The form of it used in Roman print (a) is a new type, but is intelligible at first sight. It is used in reformed spelling of German as well as of English, and is adopted in the Oxford English dictionary. The use of it requires no change in common writing or italic print, except that care must be taken to write a, not A, for the capital.

Arm! arm! America. Hark! hark! the lark.
Arm! arm! America. Hark! hark! the lark.

9. Strong ā in ar, ear, alf, augh, etc.

ā is clearest and most nearly constant in accented ar final or followed by a second consonant other than r, as in bār, cār, fār, pār, stār, etc.; bārb, ārc, cārd, ārgue, pārk, mārl, ārm, bārn, hārp, bārque, stārry < stār (not marry, etc.). Mārs, ārt, cārve, stārve, etc.; in strong unaccented ar, as in cārmation, cārbolic, etc.; in ear, as in heārken, heārt, heārth, and sometimes in er, as in sergeant = sārjent.

ā is recognized as the correct sound before silent l, followed by f, m, or v, as in cālf, hālf, bālm, cālm, pālm, psālm, quālm, cālve, hālve, sālve. Some persons say calm to rime with am, and the like, but that is not approved: ā should have the same sound in cālf as in sārf.

ā is heard before gh = f, nch, nd, nt, but it is written au, as in laugh (lāf), launch (lānch), laundry (lāndri), aunt (ānt), etc. Some of these words have variant pronunciations like a in can or like ô in aor, but in the pronunciation here approved au in laugh has the same sound as a in scarf.

ā not Anglicized comprises most of the ā's of this Dictionary.

10. Variant ą in aff, ance, ask, ath, etc.

ą is used to denote words of variant pronunciation like ask, fast. These words have a formal pronunciation substantially like a in arm, calm, etc., and also a frequent pronunciation verging to a in ax, am. An intermediate sound has been a favorite American suggestion. Variant ą is found:

1. ą in aff, aft, as in chąff, etc., ąfter, etc.
2. ą in ance, anch, and, ans, ant, as in dąnce, etc., brąnch, etc., commąnd, etc., gąnsel, etc., grąnt, etc.
3. ą in am in England: exąmple.
4. ą in ask, asp, ass, ast, as in ąsk, etc., gąsp, etc., pąss, gląss, etc., pąst, cąste, cąstle, etc.
5. ą in ath, as in bąth, pąth, etc.
6. ą for a in scientific terms and names derived from Greek or Latin, or formed in analogy with ancient Latin, which those who follow the so-called Continental method of pronouncing Latin give the sound of variant ą as described above.
7. ą for a in foreign words not fully Anglicized or established in pronunciation as ā or ą.

11. Obscure a in unaccented syllables, and in the diphthongs ai and au.

a is used in unaccented syllables which if accented would have strong or variant a sound, but lose their proper resonance for want of vocal effort, and verge toward an obscure sound like u in but, bŭrn.

In partake, monarch, the ar is so distinct in scholarly pronunciation, that the orthoepist may hesitate whether to print partake or pārtake, monarch or monārch; breakfast is almost distinct enough to be printed breakfāst, but in liar, final, sofa, the a is obscure beyond doubt.

a sound is represented by:

1. a in ar unaccented, as in liar, monarch, partake, etc.
2. a in open syllables unaccented, as in abase, amid, arise, sofa, ambrosia, etc.
3. a in close syllables unaccented before continuous consonants (variants 1–5, above), as before f in seraph, etc.; l in final, local, etc.; m in madam, bedlam, etc.; n in Grecian, infancy, giant, etc.; s in trespass, compass, breakfast, etc.; th in Sabbath, etc.
4. a unaccented in scientific terms and foreign words not Anglicized.
5. a in the diphthongs ai and au.

12. ai

ai as in aisle is a diphthong consisting of a glide between a as above and i as in machine. The glide sometimes begins with full accented ā as in fār, sometimes with obscure a as in sofa. The former is usually heard by American phonetists, the latter by southern English. The sound is a modern growth from accented long ī as in machine, and is still commonly printed ī. See I, in the vocabulary.

1. Printed i, in strong open syllables, final or before a vowel, as in lie (lai), vial (vaiăl), etc.; or before a single consonant or mute and liquid, as in idol, fibrous, etc., in strong endings in silent e, as in ice, receivable, quite, perceptible, mine, realize, appetite, rejoicing, etc.; before silent consonants, as indict, night, sign, etc.; before final ld, nd, nt, st; mild, etc., climb, find, Christ; so ei, as in height, sleight, etc.; so oi in chair.
2. Printed y in fly (flai), dyer, hydra, rye, type, etc.; ey in eye, etc., uy in buy.

In whatever disguise this diphthong may be hidden in common spelling, it is represented by its proper elements in the pronunciation of this Dictionary, as in the Oxford dictionary, and in the works of recent philologists.

13. au

au as in out is a diphthong consisting of a glide between a as above described and ŭ as in rude. It is a modern growth from ô, like ai from ī. In the 16th century it was pronounced and written ow (= o + u), and is still so printed, though the pronunciation changed to ou in the 18th century.

au is found:

1. Printed ou, as in thou (thau), out, hour, etc.
2. Printed ow, as in now (nau), owl, plow, etc.

In whatever disguise this diphthong may be hidden in common spelling, it is represented by its proper elements in the pronunciation of this Dictionary, as in the Oxford English dictionary, and in the works of recent philologists.

14. A a

A a A a A a
Roman Italic Script

When the Roman missionaries undertook to write the Anglo-Saxon language in Roman letters, they found several sounds unlike any Latin sounds, and among them the pair of vowel sounds now heard in fat, fare. They recognized them as intermediate between the Latin a as in arm and Latin e as in vein, and made a ligature of these letters (æ, Æ) as a new letter for the new language. The Normans had no such sounds, and the new letters were lost from use. They wrote the words which contained them with a; and so in our common print a is loaded with the sounds of both a and æ. A scientific alphabet must separate them again. The Oxford English dictionary has revived the use of the Anglo-Saxon ligature æ, and prints æt = at, mæn = man, etc. But it has seemed best to the framers of the Scientific Alphabet promulgated by the American Philological Association to differentiate a and a, to set apart a, a for the old sound in father, and use a, a exclusively for the peculiar English sound in at, man.

short long obscure

The elementary sound a appears short as in at, long as in fāre, obscure as in ąccord.

15. Short a in close accented syllables.

Short a is found mostly in accented syllables ending in a consonant, as cat'tle, ax'is, fat, ran'dom, etc.

16. Long ā before r in English words.

Long ā as in fāre is found in English words before r only. It is represented in common print by a in care (cār), scarce, etc.; by ai in hair (hār), pair, etc.; by ea in bear (bār), pear, swear, etc.; by e in ere (ār), there, etc.; by ei in their (thār), heir, etc.; by ey in eyre (ār). This sound is not distinguished from that of ē in rein by some old English dictionaries, but the phonetists of to-day make a careful distinction. It is a familiar sound in Anglo-Saxon, and a similar sound occurs in French, German, and some other foreign words given in this Dictionary.

17. Obscure ą before doubled consonants in unaccented syllables.

Obscure ą as in ąccord is found in such unaccented syllables as have a formal distinct pronunciation like short a in at, and also a colloquial pronunciation varying towards ŭ in but, bŭrn, etc. It is found mostly before a doubled consonant, as ąllay, ącquit (ącewit'), or in syllables which are familiar as separate words with the sound of a in at, as man, countryman.

18. B b

B, b. The sound b as described in its vocabulary place is regularly represented in common spelling by the same letter, B, b.

19. C = K

The Anglo-Saxon language, which is the oldest English, the Norman, and the Latin, from which most of the new words came in the early period, all used c for the first sound in can and kin (Anglo-Saxon cyn), so that Old English used c for the k sound throughout. In Middle English large numbers of words with c = k changed their pronunciation without changing their spelling, and c became an ambiguous letter before e, i, and y. K was then brought into use, giving us kin for cin, king for cing, and the like. The pronunciation of this Dictionary accepts the historical position, so far as to use c as the common letter having always the same sound as k, and to use k only in the positions where k is established.

20. c for c, ch = k, ck, etc.

1. For c of the common spelling before a, ą, ā, au, a, ă, ą, o, ŏ, e, ę, ē, u, ŭ, ū, as in picu, cęst, cārt, cow (cau), etc.; can, cāre, etc; colōgne, cōne, etc.; con, color (culęr), cōrd, etc.; cool (cūl), etc.; cŭb, cūr, etc.; before a consonant, as clam, cram, etc.; final, as music, etc.
2. For c = k before e and i as well as a, o, u, in the Roman pronunciation in the respelling of Latin words, as Liliaceæ (English pronunciation, lilēā'sēę; Roman, lilliacēē, pronounced -qkēē).
3. For ch = k, before the same vowels as c (1), as in chasm (cazm), anchor (ancęr), etc.; before a consonant, as in chlorid (clōrid), chronic (cronic), etc.; final as in epoch (epec), eunuch, distich, etc.
4. For ck final or before a consonant, as pack (pac), suckbut (sacbut), cockle (cecl); sometimes, however, the etymology of the word or some well-established form in k favors the use of k for ck.
5. For q in qu = cw, as in queen (cwīn), liquid, etc.; for qu, as in liquor (licęr), piquant (pīcant), antique (antīc), burlesque (bŭrlesc), etc.
6. For gh in hough (hec), lough (lec), etc.
7. In x = cs.

21. k for k, c = k, ch = k, ck, etc.

k is used:

1. For k in the common spelling, as Kate (kēt), skate (skēt), Konan (korōn), brakeman (brēkmąn), kitten (kitn), taking (tēking), etc.
2. For c = k, ch = k, or ck before ē, ę, e, ę, g, ī, i, ĭ, in, īŏ, as delicate (delikęt or -kēt), vacation (vękāshŭn), procuring (prokūring), etc., chemistry (kemistri), chimera (kimīra), anarchy (anarki), etc., tacking (taking), etc.

22. Ch ch

ch as in church is accepted as an elementary sound or letter in the pronunciation of this Dictionary, and named chī (chee). It is the voiceless consonant corresponding with j. ch and j are often represented in scientific phonology by tsh, dzh. See further under J, G.

ch is represented in common spelling by:

1. ch, initial, as in chance, cheer, chirp, chop, churl, etc.; final, as in beech, which, approach, etc.
2. tch, medial, as in satchel, pitcher; final, as in match, witch, etc.
3. ch in lch, nch, final, as in filch, etc., lunch, etc., by English orthoepists generally pronounced lsh, nsh.
4. te unaccented, as in righteous (rūichŭs); ti in tion unaccented, as in question (cweschŭn), etc.
5. tu unaccented, as in nature (nēchur), venture, etc.

23. D d

d. This sound as described in the vocabulary is uniformly represented by d in the common spelling. But see J.

24. DH dh

dh. The digraph dh is assumed for the elementary sound of th in that and named dhī (thee). It is described in the vocabulary under T. It is always represented by th in the common spelling. See dh under TH, p. 2107, 65.

25. E e

The elementary sound e appears short as in pen, long as in pain (pēn), each of which varies in unaccented syllables toward i in pity, as in added, surface (sŭrfęs). It is also found obscure as in moment, over, etc.

e ę ę

26. Short e before a consonant, etc.

Short e as in men is found before a consonant in the same syllable, cutting the sound off short into a pure e, as in net, sell, and in initial ec-, ef-, el-, em-, en-, er-, es-, ev-; it is represented also by a in any (eni), æ in foreign words, as in Ætna, ai in said, ea in head, ei in heifer, eo in leopard, ie in friend, ue in guess, u in bury, etc.

27. Variant ę in unaccented syllables.

Variant ę as in eclipse is used:

1. In the unaccented syllables of such words as have a formal pronunciation like e in red and a colloquial pronunciation varying toward final i (y) in pity, as added, elegant, meaning that the pedagogue says ad'ded in class, but ad'id at home, el'eg-ant in class, and el'i-gant at home.
2. For e ending an unaccented syllable which has varied toward ĭ, as in initial bę-, cę-, crę-, dę-, ę-, fę-, frę-, nę-, phę-, rę-, sę-, tę-, trę-, vę-, etc. In these words pedagogic license gives the e its name sound ee = ĭ, and lexicographic license prints it with a sign as if it had lengthened and shortened again. So e final as in Chile, and ey as in attorney, etc.

28. Obscure ę and ęr

Obscure ę as in moment, found in unaccented syllables, indicates a formal pronunciation of e as in men, and also the fact that in colloquial pronunciation it turns toward u in run, rather than to i in pity, and so becomes momunt rather than momint. Accented ęr as in her, jerk, ir in stir, etc., is pronounced substantially like ur in burn, yet has a formal pronunciation like er in merry.

ē ę̄
long variant

29. Long ē as in mate, etc.

Long ē as in mate, etc., generally known as the long sound of a, is really a prolongation of e in met, and is indicated by e in early English, French, German, Latin, Greek, and other languages. For its vanish see vocabulary. It is represented in common spelling by:

1. ea in break, ei in vein, eigh in eight, ey in they.
2. a before a vowel as in aorist, etc.; before consonants and silent e, as in fate, chaste, strange, etc.; before mb, nci, ss, in cambric, ancient, bass, etc.
3. ai in laid, ao in gaol, ay in day, au in gauge, aigh in straight. When learned in this key, it will at once suggest the proper pronunciation of French, German, Italian, Latin, or Greek words in which it occurs.

The use of ā for the long sound of e by Webster has become familiar to many, so that ē looks strange in words like abase (abēs), fatal (fētal), and the like. The elementary sound, however, is e as in met; this prolongation should be represented by e with a diacritic of prolongation or an added vowel. The Oxford dictionary uses ē. Our printers use ē as in tête-à-tête; so in other languages — Latin, Anglo-Saxon, and the rest.

30. Variant ę̄ in unaccented syllables.

Variant ę̄ as in usage is found in unaccented syllables, and indicates that some careful speakers pronounce it like the ey in they, while others pronounce it colloquially more like i in pity; the intermediate sound e as in edge, use + edge (usage), is the most common. It occurs in unaccented ace in palace (palęs), etc.; age in courage (curęj), etc.; ate in senate (senęt), etc.; so ain in fountain (fauntęn), etc., according to many authorities.

31. F f

f is represented in common spelling by:

1. f, ff, as in fate, deaf, off, etc.
2. ph, in words from Greek, as philosophy, etc., or supposed Greek, as sulphur.
3. gh, in cough (cōf), draught (drąft), enough (gnuf), laugh (lāf), rough (ruf), slough (sluf), tough (tuf), trough (trōf).

32. G g

g as in go is the sound of the Roman letter, and is always the sound of g (ng is another letter) in the respell-ing for pronunciation. It is represented in the common spelling by:

1. g, gg, before a, o, u, or a consonant, as in garden, good, gun, great, etc., egg, dagger, etc.
2. gu in guard, guest, roguish, etc., plague, fatigue, etc
3. gh in ghastly, ghost, burgher.
4. g in x = gz, as in exalt (egzôlt), etc.

g as in age is represented by j.

33. H, h, hw, ch, etc.

h as a single letter is described in the vocabulary, and it is always represented by h in common spelling; but hw is printed wh. See W. H, h is also used in the digraphs ch, dh, ph, sh, th, zh, which represent simple sounds and are spoken of in their alphabetic order.

34. H

Small capital ʜ is used for foreign forms of rough breathing, especially in Scotch and German words like loch, ach. To make it, place the vocal organs for saying k, then attempt to utter h without changing the position of the organs.

35. I i i	î	ı̂

short	long	variant

Short i before a consonant, etc.

Short i as described in the vocabulary is found in its most distinct form:

1. In syllables ending in a consonant, represented in common spelling by i, as in if, ill, him, bitter, city, filial, etc.; critic, British, etc.; by y, as in system, etc.; ee, breeches (brichez), been (bin), etc.; ie, as in sieve; ui, as in build, guilt, guinea, etc.; u, as in busy (bizi); o, as in women (wimen).

2. Prolonged and narrowing a little at the end of syllables unaccented, represented by i initial and medial, and by y final, as in Italian, levity, divorce, very (veri), city, etc. This i might be distinguished as i̱; but i has been used for simplicity, and i̱ used only in the variants toward y entering into iñ, as in nature (nêchur or nêtiu̇r), where the tiu̇r varies nearly or quite to tyu̇r, chur, and tyur.

36. Long î = ee

Long î (ee) (not long ɑi), the sound of i prolonged, as in machine, police, etc., is the i of early English and of French, German, Latin, Greek, and other languages. See I, in vocabulary place. It is regularly used for this sound wherever it occurs, and is represented in common spelling by:

1. i in ine, as in machine, marine, etc., so Capuchin, etc.; in ique, as antique, critique, etc.; in igue, as fatigue, intrigue, etc.; in ice, as caprice, police, etc.; so chemise; in ile, as profile, etc.
2. ie, as in field, etc.; grief, etc., believe, etc., piece, etc.; mien, shriek, etc.
3. ei, as in ceil, conceive, either, leisure, etc.
4. e, as in be, he, etc.; ee, as in bee, see, meet, etc.; ea, as in beast, ceast, sea, etc.; so people.
5. æ, ay, œ, as in Cæsar, quay, Phœbus, etc.
6. before r, as in here, career, ear, ̇bier, etc., thus making a diphthong with closing r. This is a more frequent sound in England than in America; English serious = sîr'ius, American sî'ri-us.

37. Variant ı̂ in dictionary pronunciations, etc.

Variant ı̂ as in renew is used in transcribing the pronunciation of other dictionaries and in a few words, as Æneas (ı̂nias), and means that the pedagogic sound is ĭ as in machine, and the colloquial a shortening toward i in pity. Words in which this sign is used for the pronunciation of the Century or Webster have in the Standard generally the preferred pronunciation e̱, as review, etc.

38. Diphthongal I i

Long i = ɑi as in pine. See under Ɑ, 12.

39. iu̇ iu i u̱

long	short	obscure

iu̇ as in adieu, iu as in duration, i u̱ as in nature (see short i, 35, 2) is a diphthongal sound, composed of i (in it or machine) and u (of full or rule), as mute, duty, etc. See under U, in vocabulary. Beginning a syllable, it generally appears in the respelling as yu̇ (accented) or yu (unaccented), as useful (yu̇sful), casual (cazhyuɑl), etc. It is represented by:

1. ieu, iew, as in adieu, lieu, view, etc.
2. eu, ew, ui, not after l, j, or r, as in feud, dew, etc., suit, nuisance, etc., so beauty < beuty, etc.
3. u, before a vowel, or medial consonants capable of beginning a syllable, as imbuing, etc., mute, musing, etc., and before gn, as impugn, etc.; except after r, l, j and sometimes s. So ue as in due, etc. See u̇, page 2107, 68, 70.

40. J < dzh < dy

J as described in the vocabulary is represented by:

1. j, initial and medial, as in jam, ajar, etc.
2. g, ge, gi, gg, as in gender, gill, etc., age, college, etc., pigeon, religion, exaggerate, etc.
3. dg, as in judge, ridge, etc.
4. di, de, as in soldier, grandeur, and so in verdure (vɢrdi̱u̇r, vɢrjur), etc.

41. K = C

k, a favorite letter in early ages for graving with chisel and hammer from right to left, became incongruous and difficult in modern Roman writing, and passed out of use among the Romanic peoples and the Anglo-Saxons. It is used to replace ambiguous c before e, i, y, etc., and to transliterate k and kh from strange languages. See C 19, 21.

42. L l

L l as described in the vocabulary is represented in common spelling by l, initial, medial, and final, as in late, milder, fail; by ll, medial and final, as in follow, roll, etc. Syllabic l is often represented by le, as in little (litl), bridle (brɑidl), etc. This should be pronounced as written, not like bridal (brɑidɑl); so syllabl, not syllabul, and the like. Syllabic l should not be pronounced ɑl, ul, nor el.

43. M m

M as described in the vocabulary is represented in common spelling by m, mm, as in map, am, summer, etc. Syllabic m, as in chasm, should not be pronounced um.

44. N n

n	ṉ	ṅ

n as described in the vocabulary is represented in common spelling by:

1. n, nn, as in no, honor, on, banner, etc.

2. Unaccented en as in heaven (hev'n); on as in lesson (les'n), etc.

ṉ as in iṅk is merely a graphic variation of ng, used for brevity and beauty before c, g, k, q.

ṅ as in bōṅ is found in French words, and is used to indicate that the preceding vowel has a nasal sound. To make it, send the sound of the vowel through the nose as much as possible. This sound in French is often represented by ng in common English spelling: but it should not be; so also in Chinese and other strange languages, in which the spelling ng has led in many words to an established English pronunciation of ng in place of ṅ.

46. Ng ng

The digraph ng, assumed from the common spelling and named ing, is the sign of the elementary palatal nasal sound in sing, sang, sung, and the like. It is described in the vocabulary under G and N. It is represented in common spelling by:

1. ng, final as in sing, wrong, and in derivatives, singer, wronging.

2. n, accented before g, as in anger, single, English, congress, etc.; accented before c = k sounds, as in sink (siṅk = siṅk), puncture, anchor, conquest, anxious (aṅkshus = aṅc'shus) > (with k silent) anxiety; so handkerchief. This ng is usually printed ṉ.

47. O o

short	long	variant

The elementary sound o appears short in obey and lengthened in old.

48. Short o in unaccented syllables, etc.

Short o as in obey is found in unaccented syllables, and is used to indicate a sound like o in no, but not so long or resonant, as in theory, propose, tomato, etc. It weakens freely toward u, and might well in many words be printed o̱; but as the pronunciation of o as u, tobacco as tubaccu, is condemned, it has seemed best to use only the simple o, without diacritic, or sometimes even with a macron, as tobacō.

49. Long o in accented syllables, etc.

Long ō as in no is found:

1. In monosyllables and in accented open syllables, as so, holy, over, etc.
2. As au in mauve, eau in beau, ew in sew, oa in foal, oe in toe, ou in soul, ow in row, ough in though, etc.

50. Variant ō > ŏ

Variant ō > ŏ: ŏr is varying in England toward ôr. Some phonetists do not recognize an ŏr, but pronounce shore shŏu and pronounce oar and or, four and for, mourn and morn, alike.

For the diphthongal sound and notation of ŏ, see under O in the vocabulary.

51. Ou ou

See Ɑu under Ɑ, 13.

52. O̱ o̱

o̱	ō	ō > o̱	o̱
short	long	variant	obscure

This new type is obtained by dropping the breve of ŏ into the body of the type, and is named ō (awe).

The elementary sound o̱ appears in not, lengthened in nought (nō), obscure in actor, atom (a̱), and in the diphthong oi as in oil.

53. Short o before consonants, etc.

Short o as in not is found before a consonant:

1. Represented by o in a final syllable, as cob, sob, pomp, etc.
2. In other syllables before another consonant or an unaccented e or i sound (sometimes other vowels), as in comma, model, prophet, tonic, novice, solace, solid, modest, etc., scholar, product, etc.
3. Represented by a in wa, wha, qua, before a final consonant sound, as in was, what, quash, etc.
4. Represented by ou in cough, as in hough, etc., by ow in knowledge, oh in John, ach in yacht.

54. Long ō in accented syllables, etc.

Long ō as in nor is found:

1. In accented syllables ending in or final or followed by a second consonant other than r, as or, orb, sort, etc.
2. In verb-forms ending in or, and taking a second r in inflection, as abhorring (-hōring), abhorred (-hōrd).
3. Printed ou, as in ought, cough, trough.
4. Printed oa, as in broad.
5. Printed au, as in gaudy, etc., aw, as in law, etc.
6. Printed a before l, ll, lc, ld, lk, lm, ls, in appal, etc.: all, almost, already, etc.; falcon; bald, etc.; balk, etc.: almanac; palsy, balsam, falchion.
7. Printed a in wa, wha, as in war, wharf, etc., so in quart (qu = cw), etc.

55. Variant ō > o̱ before ff, ft, ss, st, th.

Variant ō > o̱ before ff, ft, ss, st, th, appears as in off, oft, soft, etc.; moss, etc.; frost, etc.; cloth, etc. Such words are respelled as ŏ or o̱.

56. Obscure a̱ in unaccented syllables.

Obscure a̱ as in actor is found in unaccented syllables where a pedagogic pronunciation would give o̱ in not and a colloquial u in but, burn, as actor, debtor, atom, etc.

57. oi

oi as in oil, consisting of ŏ (as in nor) + i (as in it), is found in boy, alloy, etc.

58. P p p as described in the vocabulary is represented in common print by p, pp, as in papa, apple, map.

59. Ph ph

ph = f is not used in the Scientific Alphabet. See F, 31, and under P in the vocabulary.

60. Q Qu

[q] = c = k, is not used in the Scientific Alphabet, but cw is used for qu when both letters are sounded as in queen, and c or k when u is silent, as in piquant (pîcant), piquet (pîket). See under C; also Q, in the vocabulary.

61. R r

r as described in the vocabulary is represented in common spelling by r, rr, as in rat, herring, barn, beer; in foreign words sometimes by rh, rrh, as in rheumatism, diarrhea, etc. The same sign r is used in the Standard alphabet for opening r as in rat, brat, and for closing r as in for, forth, part. In Southern English there is said to be no closing r; the written r is either silent, or represents the vowel ŭ; farther (fȧ́dher), forth (fȯ́uth). See under R, in the vocabulary.

62. S s

S, the surd sibilant of the vocabulary, is represented in common spelling by:

1. s, ss, sc, sch, as in so, assume, scent, science, etc., schism.

2. c before e, i, and y, as in cent, civil, cycle, and before silent e final, as in place, price, force, etc.

3. x = cs in box, exit, etc.

63. Sh sh

The digraph sh, assumed from the common spelling and named ish, is the sign of the elementary sound closing in wish, opening in she. It is described in the vocabulary under S. It is represented in the common spelling by:

1. sh, as in show, shadow, wash, etc.

2. si, ssi, sci, sci), before an unaccented vowel, as in pension, passion, Asia, nauseate, conscience, so in sugar, issue, etc.

3. ti, before an unaccented vowel, as in partial, patient, nation, etc.

4. ci), ce, che, before an unaccented vowel, as in provincial, ancient, vicious, etc., ocean, etc., luncheon, etc. If sh sounds of this sort occur in two successive syllables, the former is often sounded s, as in pronunciation (pro-nun'si-ē'shun).

5. ch after l, n, final, as in filch, pinch, pronounced sh by British authorities (see Ch above), and in many strange words mainly from French, as champagne, charade, chevalier, etc., capuchin, machine, etc.

t as described in the vocabulary is represented in common spelling by:

1. t, tt, as in tale, tatters, hot, butt.

2. th, as in Thomas, thyme, etc., phthisic, etc.

3. d, ed, final in preterits and participles after a surd, as in faced (fēst), asked (askt), etc. See T, in vocabulary.

65. Th th

The digraph th, assumed from the common spelling and named ith, is the sign of the elementary sound closing in pith, myth, opening in thin, think. It is described in the vocabulary under T. It is represented in the common spelling by:

1. th initial as in thank, thumb, etc.

2. th medial in words not Anglo-Saxon, as author, method, panther.

3. th final as in bath, birth, length, breadth, width, etc.

th in common spelling stands for two sounds: (1) th in think, which foreigners often call tink. (2) th in then, which they call den. In the pronunciation of the Standard Dictionary th is used for the first sound, dh for the second: thank, dhen. If the words then, they, thy, are carefully pronounced and listened to, a vocal murmur will be heard with the opening consonant, like the murmur heard with d in den, day, dle, while in think, thin, there is no such murmur, but the opening sound is like that of t in tink; t is to th as d is to dh, tink is to think as den is to dhen. See Dh above.

66. U u

u short ū long o͝o obscure

The two forms of capital and lower-case U u are differentiated in the Scientific Alphabet so as to make two sets of letters, Ū u for the sound in full, U ŭ for the sound in up. The first is named from its sound o͝o (oo).

The elementary sound u appears in full, and it is prolonged in fool (fo͝ol), you (yo͞o), and in the diphthong iu after a consonant (yo͞o beginning a syllable), few (fio͞o), union (yo͞onyun), and obscure in injure (inj*o͝o*r).

67. Short u

u in ful, in Roman pronunciation of Latin, etc.

Short u as in full is found:

1. In pull, bull, bullet, bulrush, pulpit, etc.

2. In the syllable ful, as cupful, etc.

3. After s = sh, as censure, sugar.

4. Before sh, as in bush, push, cushion, etc.

5. In wo, as in woman, wolf, etc.: oul, as in could, oo as in book, good, etc.

6. In syllables short in quantity in the Roman pronunciation of Latin and in strange languages.

68. Long ū

ū after r, l, j, etc., and in Roman pronounciation of Latin.

Long ū as in rule is found:

1. Mostly after r, l, or j, as in rude, etc.

2. Printed ew, etc., as in crew, lewd, jew, rheum, etc.

3. Printed ui, as in cruise, fruit, juice, etc.

4. Printed ou, as in you, through, youth, etc.; and words lately from French, as tour, croup, soup, etc., route, rouge, etc., bouquet, routine, etc.

5. Printed oo as in food, mooing, etc.

6. In accented long syllables in the Roman pronunciation of scientific or Latin words and in strange languages.

69. Obscure o͝o

o͝o in -jure, -sure, etc.

Obscure o͝o as in injure is found in the terminations -jure, -sure, etc. It means that the o͝o has a formal pronunciation as in rule, and also a colloquial pronunciation varying towards ū in burn.

70. Diphthongal u

u = iu, in duration = iu, in nature = i*o͝o*, etc., commonly called long u. see under I, 35, 39.

71. Ü ü

ü as in dune is found in French words. To make it, round the lips for ū (oo) and try to say ī (ee).

72. U u

u short ū long

This pair of letters is differentiated from the old U u, by making a lower-case like the capital, as in S s, X x, V v, W w, etc. It is named from its sound ū = u(r.

The elementary sound u appears in run; it is prolonged in turn.

73. Short u

u in monosyllables and in syllables ending in a consonant.

Short u as in but is found:

1. Mostly in monosyllables or accented syllables ending in a consonant, as nuto, upper, in unaccented syllables, as circus, succeed, etc., especially before r, as sulfur, etc.

2. For o before n, ne, ng, m, mb, me, ve, th, dh, z, as in son, done, tongue, among, comfort, bomb, come, above, etc., nothing, brother, etc., dozen, etc.

3. For oo in blood, oe in does, ou in double, pious, io in -cion, -tion, as nation, etc.

74. Long ū

ū before r, etc.

Long ū as in burn is found before r only, generally followed by a second consonant, as hurl, hurt; for o in work, for the German oe in Goethe, or the French eu in douceur, etc. To make this German oe or French eu sound carefully, round the lips for ū (oo) and try to say ē (ay).

75. V v

v as described in the vocabulary is represented in common spelling by v, as in vat, have.

76. W w

w as described in the vocabulary is represented by w in common spelling, as in wo, beware; wh = hw, as in what, whence.

77. X x x as in box is used as an abbreviation of cs. See vocabulary.

78. Y y

y is always a consonant in the pronunciation. See vocabulary.

79. Yu yu

yu = common initial u, unit (yūnit). See vocabulary.

80. Z z

z, the sonant of s, as described in the vocabulary, is used in respelling for z, and for s sounding as z, as in zone, rose.

81. Zh zh

The digraph zh is assumed in analogy with sh, for the elementary sonant corresponding with the sh, and named zhī (zhee). It is the sound of si (= zy) in -sion after an accented vowel, as in occasion, vision, etc., and of the si (= zy) implied in su as in composure (= compōzyur, compōzhur), pleasure, etc., casual, etc., and of ge in French rouge, etc. See under Z, in vocabulary.

82. Doubled Consonants.

A doubled consonant represents a consonant prolonged or held so that the closing of the organs and the opening of them are separated, usually to different syllables, as in un-noticed, un-natural. Most of the historical doubled consonants in English are now pronounced as single, but when they are between a distinct short vowel and an accented syllable of separate significance both are retained, as in ac-cord; the first to represent the closing of the organs necessary to complete the short vowel in ac-, the second as necessary to the significance of -cord.

83. Orthography.

In respelling a word for pronunciation it is necessary to determine in the first place by observation or testimony what are the elementary sounds of which the word is composed. Then the letters of the scientific alphabet which represent those sounds are written in their proper order. All other letters which may be found in the word as commonly spelled are omitted, however interesting they may be for history or philology. This would give an accurate representation of the word as far as it is usually represented in common writing or printing. But in the scientific orthography of this Dictionary nicer shades of vowel sound are indicated by diacritics as explained on page 2104. Those who use the Standard are warned against the pedagogic inclination to give each unaccented vowel its name sound at the end of a syllable, and its common short sound in the midst of a syllable, saying, ē-raiz for arise, ī-vent for event, ai-talian for italian, pronouncing the last syllable of Roman like man, of errant like rant, and the like. The spoken word is further marked by accents.

84. Accents.

The syllable which has the principal stress is marked in this Dictionary by an acute accent after it, ′. Syllables which have stress, but less than the primary, are marked with a secondary accent, ″. The secondary accents have been used more freely than is usual. The rhythm of English speech seldom permits more than two syllables of a word to be pronounced in succession without an observable difference in stress. There are many words, however, in which three or four or more syllables are without as much stress as a common secondary accent. In such cases secondary accents have been often used to mark the syllable of slighter stress; but initial syllables followed by an accented syllable are left without printed accent, though they often have distinct vowel quality, and syllabic combinations like an accented syllable.

In determining the place of the accents, a conflict is found between the Germanic and the Greco-Romanic principles of accentuation. The first places the accent on the syllables most important to the thought, the root syllable or the most important modifier, usually at the beginning of the word. The other places the accents for rhythm, the length of the two last syllables setting the cadences. Our scientific terms and a large part of our literary words come to us with the rhythmical accent. New compounds of Greek and Latin words are accented at first according to the length of their penultimate syllables. But there is a strong tendency with men of science to use the Germanic principle, to separate compounds into their original parts, and give each its own accent. The chemists of the American Association for the Advancement of Science have formally adopted this principle for their technical terms. A considerable number of other scientific terms have an acknowledged pronunciation of the same kind. This Dictionary has desired to record all such as alternative if not accepted pronunciations.

85. The Division of Syllables.

The division of syllables in this Dictionary is intended to represent the divisions of pronunciation. They are determined partly by physiological laws of motion to produce the proper sounds, partly by movement of purpose to bring out the thought.

The short vowel sounds are characterized by their close combination with following consonant sounds.

The accented syllable attracts the adjacent consonants. These are physiological laws which largely determine the division of syllables.

But there are frequent combinations of letters in which more than one division may be made that will equally give the correct sounds and observe the physiological laws. In such cases the division has been chosen that will exhibit the significant parts of the word most plainly.

This method of division has been most freely used in the technical terms with which this book abounds. These are in fact different from colloquial speech in being primarily written words. Their inventors do not think about their pronunciation. Many of them never are pronounced. They are made of bits of Greek looked up in dictionaries, and never heard. It is of extreme importance to make their parts plain to the eye. It has seemed best to favor this purpose as much as possible in the division of syllables.

86. Variant Pronunciation.

When pronunciations are given with much nicety, distinctions are introduced more subtle than the understanding requires. Different pronunciations are brought out, which are equally common, equally good, equally used by the same person. It is therefore incorrect to give one of these pronunciations an absolute preference. A thorough treatment requires that the conditions and connections in which each pronunciation is used shall be observed and stated. This is done to some extent in this Dictionary. A few of the most common conditions of variation have been applied, the most important of which are those which are included in the words colloquial and technical or scientific. Others occasionally introduced are poetical, devout, humorous, in certain old phrases. Pronunciation is really a work of art, one of the fine arts. A great orator or conversationalist deals with varying shades of voice as the artist with the tones of a violin.

In one great class of words, scientific terms not colloquial, it has been found that there are two general schemes of pronunciation: one, the so-called English method, which has been given in the dictionaries, another following in the main the Continental method of pronouncing vowels, which is used by most of the scientific men. It has seemed due to lexicographic accuracy to record the current pronunciation, and it has been given as an alternative with that of former dictionaries.

The liberality of the publishers of this Dictionary provided a comprehensive collection of original materials for the study of pronunciation from all regions of the English-speaking world, a collection such as has never before been at the command of any editors. It is hoped that the use of it in the Standard may promote the uniform and accurate pronunciation of English all over the world.

PROPER NAMES OF ALL KINDS

WITH THEIR PRONUNCIATION,

INCLUDING

NOTABLE NAMES IN BIBLIOGRAPHY, BIBLIOLOGY, BIOGRAPHY, FICTION, GEOGRAPHY, HISTORY, AND MYTHOLOGY; TO WHICH ARE ADDED PEN-NAMES, PRÆNOMENS WITH THEIR SIGNIFICATION AND EQUIVALENTS IN OTHER LANGUAGES, PSEUDONYMS, SOBRIQUETS, SURNAMES, TITLES OF BOOKS DIFFICULT OF PRONUNCIATION, ETC.; ALSO MUCH DEFINITIVE, ETYMOLOGICAL, HISTORICAL, AND STATISTICAL INFORMATION, BRIEFLY STATED FOR CONVENIENT REFERENCE.

In this department of the Dictionary all words in full-face type have been accented and syllabicated to aid in their pronunciation. The vocabulary words have been respelled according to the system followed throughout the Dictionary, except where the syllabication and accentuation seem sufficient to indicate the pronunciation. Greek and Latin names have usually been pronounced in dictionaries by the English method only; but since the Roman method is now much used, it is desirable that it should be indicated here. By applying to the vocabulary word in full-face type the key at the bottom of the pages or that given in the "Roman" column of the Language Key (pp. 2104-5), the Roman pronunciation is learned. In the case of names from other foreign languages, by substituting for the English key the key in any one of the columns e. g., Danish or French) of the Language Key, the pronunciation of names according to the phonetics of the language indicated in that column is learned. With many Greek names a variant is given, showing the Greek spelling transliterated into Roman characters with Greek accents and marks of length, so that the Greek pronunciation is set forth as completely as it would be by printing in Greek characters.

Biblical names of less importance appear without definition, being recorded for pronunciation merely.

Etymologies in brackets are given after some names to explain their origin and meaning; thus, "Abihail [Heb., mighty; Bib.]," signifies that Abihail is from the Hebrew, means "mighty," and is found in the Bible.

Figures following the location of (1) a mountain, indicate its height above sea-level, (2) a bay, a gulf, an island, or the like, indicate its area; (3) a river, indicate its length.

Figures in brackets indicate dates of birth and of death. If followed by a note of interrogation, as [1794?-1850], the date queried is not certainly known. If preceded by a minus-sign (−), as [−114-45], the dates indicate years before the Christian era.

Geographical names are spelled according to the forms adopted by the "United States Board on Geographic Names."

Names in brackets, in small capitals (followed by italics), are used in entries of characters from works of fiction, poems, dramas, etc., to indicate the author of the work, the italics being the title of the work in which the character is to be found; thus, "Alfred Jingle [DICKENS Pickwick Papers]," indicates that Jingle is a character in Dickens's novel entitled "Pickwick Papers."

Statistics of population are derived from the latest census reports, or, where such reports are wanting, from the most recent reliable authority.
